Civic Club Views With Satisfaction Projects Accomplished Past Year

CIVIC CLUB HELD LAST MEETING OF THE YEAR ON THURSDAY EVENING

Club Views With Satisfaction Projects Accomplished Past Year

The Klemme Civic Club held its last quarterly meeting at the school gym last Thursday evening when a dutch lunch was served and a business meeting and program held. A large crowd was in attendance and the program given by the Senneff sisters of Britt was greatly enjoyed The young ladies gave a musical program consisting of marimba and piano numbers.

W C Keraus, who has served very effeciently, as president of the club, was re-elected to the office on the first ballot by a large maiority. J I. Overholt was named Vice President; Dr. E. G. Schaeffer, Secretary and C. G. Waterman, treasurer

President Keraus will name the several members of the Executive Council and chairmen will be appointed by him to serve on the various committees.

Very Successful Year

Under the leadership of President Keraus, the Civic Club can look back on a very successful year and the completion of a number of projects.

Through the work of the club an improved street lighting system was installed Lighted highway signs were put up at the west edge of Klemme Large highway signs were erected east of Klemme on the Ventura-Meservey road Summer entertainment including band concerts and open air movies were given the club's backing An Easter Egg Hunt was sponsored last spring by the club Christmas street decorating and lighting was again sponsored by the club. The high school basketball teams were given free transportation to games by club members the past year The Club made an effort to enlarge the local mail route the past year, but were not successful in this attempt.

New School Major Project

The Civic Club feels proud in its work in helping build a new school house in Klemme. During the spring and early summer months the Club worked on the proposition of procuring a community building for Klemme. From this plan the Club swung around and backed the school board in an effort to get a new school house. The board at the June meeting received the backing of the club one hundred per cent and the new school building is now under construction, largely as a result of that meeting.

A membership of some seventy men and women was built up by the club during the year.

The club cooperated with the local fire department in entertaining the farmers who contributed to the purchase of the new fire truck. A banquet and a big entertainment was staged in September when farmers, firemen and club members all held a big get-to-gether at the school house.

Projects for the coming year will be worked out by the planning board and various commitees of the club.

The purpose of the Civic Club is to make Klemme a better town in which to live, a town that will attract people here to make their home, and make them proud that Klemme is, "Little, But Lively."

"BLACKTOP" FOR IOWA ROADS IS REJECTED

McKinnon Hits Hancock County Project From "High Cost" Cause

DES MOINES—Highway Commissioner Curtis L. McKinnon Thursday said the commission had rejected proposals to improve roads in Hancock and Shelby counties with "blacktop" paving.

McKinnon, long a foe of "blacktop" when its cost approaches that of concrete, said the commission Wednesday turned down a $166,363 bid for improving highway 111 between Kanawha and Britt with the bituminous material.

Alternate Bid Rejected

An alternate bid of $172,000 for concrete construction on the same stretch also had to be turned down, he said, because federal aid regulations forbid acceptance of any but the lowest proposal on any particular job.

The Shelby county stretch involved approximately 12½ miles on highway 39 at Harlan, he said. The bid in that instance was $215,000. Harlan is the hometown of retiring Gov. Nelson G. Kraschel.

Opposed To Cost

"I am not against 'blacktop' roads," he said, "but I am opposed to going too high for that type of construction."

The vote rejecting all Hancock bids was unanimous, he reported.

Old Cage Battle Is Big Attraction

NEWS OF THE WEEK FOR SPORT FANS IS GAME WITH GOODELL HIGH

The red letter day on both the Klemme Shamrocks and the Goodell High School calendar is the annual clash between the basketball teams of the two schools.

The Klemme-Goodell game is always a thriller and the first of the two games will be played on the Goodell court Thursday evening of this week.

Although Goodell got off to a slow start this year, they have a good team that may throw plenty of scares into the Shamrock five before the game gets very far underway. Goodell has not done so well so far this year, but they have played some close games, and their style of play is improving every day.

Fans who want to see a real game should plan to accompany the team to Goodell, Thursday night. Last year was the first time in several seasons that the Shamrocks were able to crack through the Goodell defense for a slim victory of two points to give Goodell their first defeat on their home floor. Can the Shamrocks do it again?

Reversal of Foreign Policy Seen In U. S., British Loans to China

By Joseph W. La Bine

EDITOR'S NOTE—When opinions are expressed in these columns they are those of the news analyst and not necessarily of the newspsper.

International

Although U. S.-British sympathies in the Chinese-Jap war have always been with China, industrialists of both nations have gladly profited by selling arms to more prosperous Japan. In the U. S., this activity continued unabated until last June 11, when Secretary of State Cordell Hull asked that it be discontinued. Still later came a serious blow to U. S. prestige when Japan, having conquered Shanghai, Canton, Hankow and Nanking, proceeded systematically to shut China's "open door" in violation of the nine-power treaty. Obviously, U. S.-British supremacy in the Orient was at an end unless the two nations would reverse their soft-stepping policy and take military or economic recourse against Tokyo. After weeks of undercover negotiation between London and Washington, the recourse now emerges as economic. Still acting without apparent co-operation, the two capitals made similar news on the same day:

Washington. The government-operated Export-Import bank advanced $25,000,000 in credits to a New York company for exporting U. S. agricultural and manufactured goods to China. Recognized as a very thinly veiled government loan, most funds will be used for automobile trucks and gasoline to haul munitions over the new Chinese gateway from Burma. To mature in five years, the loan is guaranteed by the Bank of China. Chief U. S. negotiator was Jesse Jones, chairman of the Reconstruction Finance corporation.

London. Now en route through parliament is an allotment of 10,000,000 pounds for export credits to protect Great Britain's far-flung foreign trade from Nazi encroachment. Already earmarked is an initial credit of 450,000 pounds for the Chinese government, to purchase trucks and roadmaking equipment for the new Burma gateway. Also under consideration is a British loan to the Chinese exchange equalization fund to help China's dollar.

While Chinese officials hailed the simultaneous moves as a "diplomatic victory," while Tokyo wondered what recourse to take, while Chinese government bonds showed good strength, Germany's foreign office commented in its official mouthpiece, Diplomatische Korrespondenz: "The United States' new policy furnishes food for thought. It shows that Washington apparently pursues aims which go beyond its old-established policy of good relations with other countries . . . No opportunity is missed for directing attacks or innuendos against authoritarian states."

Rumania

Of all the lesser European nations subjected to Nazi Germany's political-economic pressure, Rumania has alone stood up on its feet and barked back. Reason: Rumania has been able to buy her imports anywhere she desires, but Germany must have Rumaniah wheat and oil. Until last fall this upper hand served King Carol well, but the ring of Nazi-dominated nations around Bucharest has now grown so powerful that he must bow to Berlin or risk economic starvation.

Thus Rumania watched anxiously as German aggression in Austria and Czechoslovakia threatened to wipe out her prospering trade with those two nations. Since most of Rumania's Czech imports came from Sudetenland, now a part of Germany, the Reich gained an enormous advantage through this territorial acquisition.

To woo Rumania successfully, Germany must only meet the dilatory competition of Great Britain, whose promise to buy part of King Carol's wheat surplus is overshadowed by a German offer to buy all of it. Thus heartened, Rumania has signed a trade agreement whereby the Reich will take almost a third of its exports, meanwhile buying half its imports from Berlin.

How long Rumania can remain independent of Germany's beck-and-call is problematical. Like a child who wants cake but won't brush its teeth, King Carol has successfully smashed the rising Nazi party within his borders. Yet he followed this coup with a totalitarian declaration under which Rumania becomes a one-party country politically similar to Germany. Likewise, while begging for German trade he has started an intensified program of fortification against German aggression.

Spain

On a gloomy November day in 1931, Spain's parliament stripped King Alfonso of his citizenship and properties. Already, the previous April, Alfonso had left for France, soon taking residence in Italy where Premier Benito Mussolini has not been unfriendly to his once-royal guest.

Since the loyalist government that ousted Alfonso is now fighting a losing battle to Generalissimo Francisco Franco, moreover since Italy and Spanish royalists are on Franco's side, observers have long thought Alfonso has a good chance of returning to the throne some day. Franco hinted as much last spring, indicating that he might retain for himself the premiership and thus make the throne a puppet post.

This theory is now strengthened by action of rebel Spain's council of ministers, not only restoring Alfonso's citizenship, but his lands as well. How soon—if ever—the exking will return to Spain is still a secret, but pessimists regard Franco's gesture as merely an insincere bid for continued royalist support which has been dwindling in recent months. Still others think Alfonso would never return to the throne, that his job would be taken instead by Prince Juan, compromise candidate of both royalist factions—the Carlists and Rennovacion Espanolists.

Politics

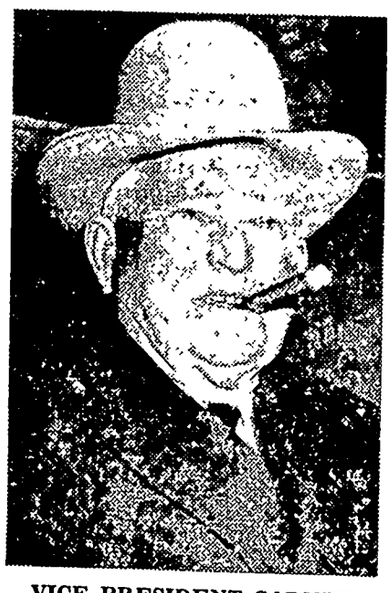
Smart politicians lay their campaign groundwork well in advance, swapping favor for favor, smelling out the trail that will most likely lead to success. Thus official Washington has started buzzing with rumors following (1) resignation of Commerce Secretary Daniel C. Roper and Attorney General Homer Cummings, and (2) Vice President John Nance Garner's return to the capital. That Mr. Garner visited President Roosevelt the same day Mr. Roper resigned gave an added zest to the game.

While both the President and vice president look to 1940, they apparently look in opposite directions. No public utterance followed the conference but it is quite obvious that Mr. Garner looks fearfully on the projected appointment of WPA Administrator Harry Hopkins to succeed Mr. Roper. The Roosevelt program: To strive for more New Deal gains such as governmental reorganization, and to give Harry Hopkins a build-up for presidential nomination in 1940. The Garner program: To consolidate the administration's position, to unite arguing factions and make a record in congress which will win public approval.

Both programs lead to 1940, but each goes down its own trail. In the inevitable compromise, it is expected that Mr. Hopkins will be named commerce secretary, but that in return congress will demand drastic revision of relief administration.



VICE PRESIDENT GARNER
He also looks forward to 1940.

How this solution could clarify the 1940 presidential issue is not apparent; moreover, conservative elements in the Democratic party doubt that the commerce department's immediate charge, U. S. business, will like the man whose job has been to dispense $9,500,000,000 since 1933.

While gossiping over this morsel, Washington's politicians have let pass almost unnoticed an equally important bit of groundwork leading to 1940. John L. Lewis, C. I. O. chieftain, has spoken publicly against a labor-sponsored third party, choosing instead to broaden his Labor's Nonpartisan league. Its program: To elect delegates in the presidential primaries who will assure nomination of "progressive candidates." This means that C. I. O. endorses continuation of the New Deal, and that a move to the right would cause the Lewis front to bolt from the Democratic convention.

Congress

Last winter Texas' Rep. Wright Patman offered congress a measure to tax chain stores out of existence. Its gist: To levy graded assessments from $50 per store on small chains to $1,000 per store on large chains, each store tax to be multiplied by the number of states in which the chain operated. Sample: A chain operating in 48 states plus the District of Columbia would pay $49,000 per store annually on each store over 500.

Though boasting 73 co-sponsors, Mr. Patman's bill failed. Also defeated was a New York state chain store tax, which signified that chains had more friends than their foes had expected. But an apparently dying issue was revived as congress adjourned, for Mr. Patman announced his bill would be introduced in January, 1939, as House Resolution No. 1. Battle lines since formed presage a bitter contest next month, as chains and anti-chain agitators review their cases:

WRIGHT PATMAN

Anti-Chain. Supporting Mr. Patman is a once-potent national trend (now questionable) which caused 21 state legislatures to enact chain store taxes. Another state, Colorado, last month rejected a referendum to kill a similar levy. Having won passage of his Robinson-Patman act, also an anti-chain measure, Mr. Patman bases his new attack on familiar charges that chains (1) force independent merchants out of business; (2) cause low farm prices; (3) take money out of the community.

Pro-Chain. U. S. census figures show a decreasing number of chain stores and more independents, while federal trade commission statistics credit chains with distributing $8,000,000,000 in goods at an average 10 per cent saving to consumers. If the Patman bill passes, resultant taxes (with the Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea company, they would total more than half 1937's gross sales) would destroy practically all chains, would reportedly wipe out 30 per cent of the farmer's market, throw nearly 1,000,000 chain employees out of work and force a sharp rise in retail prices. Chains point proudly to their two-year campaign of helping farmers move surplus crops like lamb, beef, walnuts, apples, and canned grapefruit juice. Anti-Patmanites include the American Federation of Labor, speaking for its 5,000,000 members (who charge the measure would increase living costs and unemployment), and the National Association of Retail Boards, which termed it "vicious."

Counting noses on the eve of congress' opening, Mr. Patman finds his 73 original co-sponsors dwindled to 32 through election defeats, while another (New York's Caroline O'Day) has withdrawn support. If the Patman bill succeeds in reaching the house floor, political observers wonder whether continually mounting sentiment will not bury it in a protest vote.

LUNCH COUNTER TO ENCOURAGE LAYERS

Expert Advises Five-Foot Feeders for 100 Hens.

By Dr. A. R. Winter, Poultry Department, Ohio State University.—WNU Service.

Providing free-lunch counters for birds in the laying house is a good way to get eggs and reduce labor in preparing poultry feed. Each 100 hens need three five-foot feeders to avoid overcrowding while eating and each feeder should have a reel to keep the chickens out of the feed.

Poultrymen might well consider keeping the best of the two-year-old hens rather than to sell them. Meat prices are low and hens will lay 80 per cent as many eggs during their second year as producers as they did when pullets. Very few birds are worth keeping for layers the third year.

Poultrymen will be saved money and trouble if they cull out poorly developed pullets. It costs too much money to feed laying rations to pullets that will not lay eggs until next spring. Good two-year-old hens will make better use of the feed.

Laying houses should be repaired, cleaned, and provisions made for ventilation. Diseases spread rapidly in dirty houses, and colds attack birds which are subjected to drafts or overheating. Vaccinations for fowl pox should be postponed if the pullets are ready to go in the laying house as the treatment is likely to delay production.

Pullets which appear healthy and vigorous do not need treatment for internal parasites. Treatments which kill parasites have at least a temporary detrimental effect upon the birds and production will be delayed. It always is a good practice to remove ailing birds from the flock as soon as they are detected.

Getting back to feeds for the layers, tests show good results when birds are fed mash concentrate and grains in separate self feeders. The concentrate may vary from 24 to 32 per cent of protein; less concentrate is consumed when the protein content is high. Wheat, corn, and oats can be used for grain and they should be separated in the feeders.

Advantage Is Found in Having the Same Breeds

A dairyman just starting with purebreds may feel that since all his neighbors have one breed of cattle, he should get another breed so as to have a monopoly in the business of selling breeding stock. There is no question about the monopoly, says the Missouri Farmer, but there would probably be little business to monopolize. It is difficult for an isolated small breeder to dispose of his surplus stock to advantage, while if there are many breeders with the same breed, buyers are attracted to the locality because of the better chance to get the desired animals from one or more of the several breeders.

There are other advantages to a dairyman in having the same breed as his neighbor, such as the possibility of exchanging bulls, and of owning good purebred bulls co-operatively. These advantages are obtained by those having grade herds as well as by those with purebreds. Then there is also the opportunity for taking advantage of special breed sales of surplus stock, and, lastly, the advantage of bringing the community together in other endeavors which usually result where there is but one breed. It might be added that these same thoughts are applicable to other kinds of live stock and poultry.

With the Farmers

In Vermont, grade A eggs signify that they are of the fourth grade.

In some states, grade A eggs are the best eggs, while in others they are second grade.

Clean straw makes a good mulch for strawberry plantings and helps protect them from winter damage.

Many farmers make it a practice to inspect terraces for rodent holes. Filling them helps prevent terrace breaks.

Ten per cent of the total of eggs produced in the United States in recent years is estimated to have gone into cold storage.

The United States has about four and one-half million colonies of honey bees that make about 160,000,000 pounds of honey a year.

Undersized pullets lay undersized eggs.

A proper fat ration for pullets is necessary to obtain best egg production, it is reported to the American Chemical society.

WHO'S NEWS THIS WEEK

By LEMUEL F. PARTON

NEW YORK.—Reginald Denny, the one-time professional boxer who became a motion picture star, develops his toy airplane hobby into a business. He rings up a sale of six robot planes to Uncle Sam, to be used in army experiments next summer. They are expected to be curtain-callers for larger and more business-like robots, flying without pilots, guided by radio beams, dusting TNT on intruders.

Robot Planes Is Ex-Pug Denny's Hobby-Business

Reginald Denny will be remembered as the actor extolled a decade or so ago as "the typical, wholesome young American." Then he turned out to be an Englishman, a flier and machine-gunner in the British royal air force in the war. A light comedian, he had two absorbing interests—his screen antics and what seemed at the time a juvenile absorption with miniature airplanes. From the latter, he developed some ideas about radio-controlled planes. He established the Reginald Denny Industries, with James Blackton, an experienced technician, as manager. He is making a small "flying torpedo," designed for flying in swarms, with no pilot, and with land-control of the bomb-dropping as well as guidance. When completed the United States will get it.

He ran away from school at the age of 16 to play for Charles Frohman at the Duke of York's theater. His first featured role was in the "Merry Widow." Then he became a professional boxer, later champion of the Second corps of the royal air force.

NELSON T. JOHNSON, ambassador to China, coming home by a side door as Japan slams the open door, probably will have in his hip pocket a copy of the "Analects" of Confucius, barring possibly "Alice in Wonderland," which he also packs around with him, it is his favorite reading.

A Scholar and Gagster—That's Envoy Johnson

Like Henry R. Curran, deputy mayor of New York, he believes that public activities and attitudes should be infused with humor. More than any other American, he has been successful in translating our best anthology of pullman car gags to the Chinese. Following the labyrinth of Confucius and Lao Tze, he finds a unique approach to the Chinese mind and has been one of our most successful ambassadors. But, back home, he is sharp, exact, statistical and thoroughly occidental, among which attributes is a line of up-and-coming Chamber of Commerce oratory. He lives in two worlds.

After his graduation from George Washington university, Mr. Johnson mixed with the Indians of the Southwest, picked up Indian dialects with remarkable facility, thereby discovering his linguistic gifts. That sent him to China as a student interpreter in 1906. In the Far East, he has occupied many important posts and is a former assistant secretary of state. He finds the Chinese have a lot more humor than the Japanese.

IT WAS about three years ago that the head of the German National Institute of Physics denounced the "debased Jewish atom," and promised to deliver to the Reich an untainted "Aryan" atom. Under the banner of "The Pragmatic and Dogmatic Spirit in Physics," this scientific revolution has been advanced by the Nazi savants, and at last American scientists mobilize against it. Dr. Franz Boas, 80-year-old German-born American anthropologist, heads a committee of eight distinguished scientists in publishing a manifesto, signed by 1,284 of their colleagues, leaders in all branches of science throughout America. They "defend the right of scientists to speak the truth as they understand it."

Group Aims to Keep Scientific Inquiry Free

Dr. Boas spent about 55 years studying long heads and round heads, but was stymied by the square heads. "If the world goes crazy, what can we do?" he said, resigning from Columbia university two years ago.

He came to this country to attend the Chicago World's fair in 1893, after an Arctic expedition which had launched his career as an anthropologist. He remained to coach virtually all great American anthropologists and to become a world authority in linguistics, primitive mentality, folklore, ethnology and senility. The old Germany honored him. The new Germany made an extra special bonfire of his books.

★ Repeated Mistakes
★ Doug. Sr. in Again
★ A Moral-less Tale

By Virginia Vale

THERE'S a good reason f one of the mistakes th Hollywood makes about eve so often; the only trouble that after it's been made th studios forget about it, an make it all over again later

You read about beautif models who've been signe for pictures—girls who po for magazine covers and a vertisements, girls whose faces a familiar to you, although you pro ably have never known their nam until you read about their goin Hollywood. Then, in all likelihoo you never hear of them again The stay in California until their co tracts run out, and then head bac to New York, sadder and wiser

One of those models talked to the other day. She'd been urged by phone, telegraph and letter— take advantage of the movies She been offered a screen test. She' dodged all interviews, just saying that she wasn't interested.

"Of course I take beautiful photographs," she said. "That's because I know how to use make-up. I'm nothing unusual to look at in real life. But the men who make movies, even though they know what make-up can do for their stars, don't seem to realize that a model's beauty may be all artificial. They size us up, and then comes the awful shock! We're not beautiful, except when our faces are re-done and are in repose. And then they lose interest in us."

Well, that hasn't been the difficulty where some of the famous models were concerned. Anita Counihan is an example. She went to Hollywood, got started in bits— and went back east again. But for one like her there have been others by the dozen, girls whose beauty in photographs captivated the movie men, when it didn't exist in real life.

Remember Mary Kornman, who used to be the sweetheart of the "Our Gang" comedy shorts? She's an attractive young woman now, and you'll see her in "It's Spring Again," with Oliver Hardy and Harry Langdon.

The Hall Johnson Negro choir, which you've often heard on the air, has been signed for that same picture, incidentally; in it they'll feature "In the Evening by the Moonlight."

Douglas Fairbanks Sr. just couldn't stay out of the picture business any longer. His new company is all set, financed by American British and Swiss capital. The senior Fairbanks will just produce— at least, at present he thinks he won't act, but you never can tell— and he has planned three pictures for 1939. They are "The Californians," "The Tenth Woman," based on the life of Lord Byron, and "The Three Musketeers."

Here are a couple of success stories of the air for you. Eugene Conley was a shipping clerk in Lynn, Mass., until not so very long ago. He took time off whenever he could to sing with three of his friends. A radio executive heard the boys, one time when Conley was playing hookey from his job in order to sing— and now Conley has three programs a week, and has had an offer from the Chicago Opera company!

John Laing didn't play hookey from his job, because he was a page boy, and soon after that he was a guide (N. B. C. has a lot of them, you know, to guide tourists through its studios). After that he did an audition as an announcer, and an announcer he was, for four years. Now he's been signed up for movies.

So one won out by not sticking to his job, and the other succeeded by sticking to it.

ODDS AND ENDS—Dolores Costello, the feminine lead opposite Adolphe Menjou in "King of the Turf"—and Bing Crosby, the horse, not the crooner, is also in the cast . . . That corn-flake company that wanted Rudy Vallee for its radio programs took Carole Lombard and Cary Grant instead.

Vanity Key to Both Health And Beauty

By PATRICIA LINDSAY

THERE are the Grundys, male and female, who complain loudly about "vanity-case phobia." Wherever you look, say they, you see a woman powdering her nose, rouging her cheeks or putting on fresh lipstick.

These Grundys would like to have all cosmetics banished. But I wonder if they realize that in urging a woman to throw away her beauty aids they are urging her to throw away her health and sanity!

For vanity is sanity! In nations as well as in individuals. Russia, mass mad for years, made the costly experiment of crushing feminine vanity. Germany is doing it today One of the first signs of Russia's restored sanity is the successful cosmetic trade in her larger cities!

A pride in your personal appearance is a health barometer. If you lack vanity you are not in normal health. A woman without vanity is either mentally depressed or whipped—resigned to letting life slip by.

Every Woman Should Like to Look Well

Take the case of a young girl whom I know. She suffered a collapse of nerves from financial reverses and disappointment in a love affair. She was talented and well educated. During normal health she was fastidious, but once her nerves gave way, she let herself go. Her hair was unkempt, her skin blotchy, her clothes untidy. She became so despondent that she would stand for hours with her face turned toward a wall!

Friends, and her physician failed to pull this girl back to health. At last a psychologist succeeded in winning her confidence. He insisted upon regular meals, daily duties, hours of sleep, and (this is where vanity enters) he insisted that each morning and night she sit before her mirror and go through a systematic beauty routine.

He convinced her that happiness was in store for her if she would make the most of herself. He told her she possessed both beauty and charm Gradually he made her live up to these compliments.

In about three months that girl was cured. She is now happily married (to a new beau!) and is successfully coping with a prominent social position! What happened? Her normal pride in her personal appearance had been restored!

So don't let a Grundy deprive you of your vanity case and what it represents. Hold on to it tightly and make it serve you! Be assured that a meticulous beauty gets far more out of life than a drab, disheartened female!

HINT-OF-THE-DAY

Face Powders

The shade of your face powder, its texture, and the way you apply it can make or mar your makeup. A good powder should give your skin the flattering illusion of clarity.

Your skin must look clean and clear and be suavely filmed with powder in a shade that is complimentary, yet unobtrusive. It should never be in a tone lighter than the shade of your skin.

When you choose your powder, let it be the best. It should be downy, yet clinging so that it will not break into patches an hour after you put it on

A good powder will also retain its delightful fragrance as long as the powder lasts Many cheap powders change fragrance after a week or two; the original scent becomes oily and sickening.

One of the leading cosmetic makers has brought out a fine powder in several exquisite shades. One is called apricot, a lovely, warm shade that does things for your skin under night lights. For daytime there is a cream shade that is excellent for the average clear complexion, and an ivory that is flattering for the pale brunette.

Uncle Sam Starts a New Year With a New "Presidential Series" of Postage Stamps

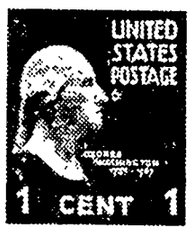
By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

© Western Newspaper Union.

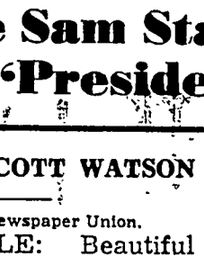
FOR SALE: Beautiful steel-engraved portraits of every President of the United States, from Washington to Coolidge, at prices ranging from 1 cent to $5. Some of these have never before been reproduced in this form nor offered to the public at this price. Send in your order today or apply in person to

UNCLE SAM

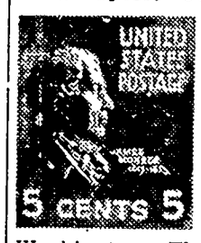
That is a notice which your Uncle Samuel might well tack up in every one of his 45,000-odd post offices throughout the country at the beginning of the New Year. For it's literally true that he will have for sale at that time a complete set of these "beautiful steel-engraved portraits of our Presidents."



These portraits are to be found on the new "Presidential series" of postage stamps which the Post Office department has been issuing during the past year. The last in the series—the 24-cent Benjamin Harrison stamp, the 25-cent William McKinley, the 30-cent Theodore Roosevelt and the 50-cent William Howard Taft—were placed on "first-day sales" in the post office in the national capital this month and by the first of the year all of the stamps in the series will be available in every post office throughout the United States.

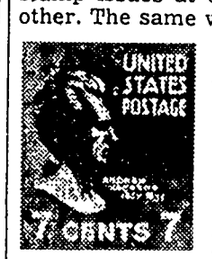


It's also literally true that some of these "portraits" have "never before been reproduced in this form." Up until the time this new series was issued, twelve of our Presidents have been denied the honor of having their portraits on our postage stamps. They were. John Adams, John Quincy Adams, Martin Van Buren, William Henry Harrison, John Tyler, James K. Polk, Millard Fillmore, Franklin Pierce, James Buchanan, Andrew Johnson, Chester Alan Arthur and Calvin Coolidge.

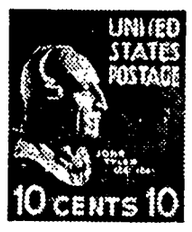


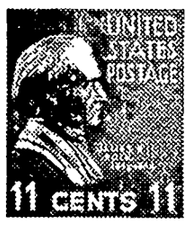
All of the others — George Washington, Thomas Jefferson, James Madison, James Monroe, Andrew Jackson, Zachary Taylor, Abraham Lincoln, Ulysses S. Grant, Rutherford B. Hayes, James A. Garfield, Grover Cleveland, Benjamin Harrison, William McKinley, Theodore Roosevelt, William Howard Taft, Woodrow Wilson and Warren G. Harding—had appeared on stamp issues at one time or another. The same was true of such statesmen as Alexander Hamilton, Henry Clay, Daniel Webster, William H. Seward, John Marshal, Robert Livingston, and Edwin M. Stanton; such military and naval heroes as Winfield Scott, Oliver Hazard Perry, William Tecumseh Sherman, David G. Farragut, and Nathan Hale; and such historical figures as Christopher Columbus, Balboa, Capt. John Smith and John Ericson. But these 12 Presidents were "forgotten men" so far as their portraits on stamps was concerned.

The same expanding postal needs which had brought prominent Americans into our stamp gallery in past years made it necessary to find some more Americans worthy of this honor. So early this year Postmaster General Farley announced that there was to be a general revision of our stamp issues, arranging the Presidents in their chronological order.

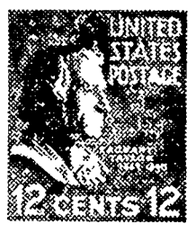


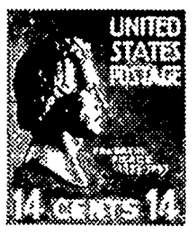
In addition to the 29 former Presidents thus honored (there is another, of course — Herbert Hoover—but he is ineligible for a place in the stamp gallery so long as he is living) two other notables, not Presidents, are retained in the new series. They are Benjamin Franklin, father of the American postal system, and Martha Washington, the first woman whose portrait appeared on one of our stamps In fact, the new series begins with these two. Franklin, who has always appeared on the one-cent stamp is now on the one-half cent issue instead of Nathan Hale and Martha Washington replaces Warren G. Harding on the one and one-half cent stamp. There is also a 4½-cent stamp which shows the White House, the home of our Presidents.



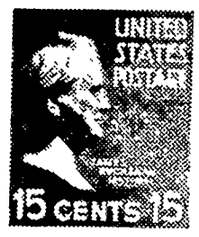


Arranging the Presidents chronologically has resulted in some noticeable shifts. Washington's likeness has been on both the two-cent and the three-cent stamps in past years. He will now appear only on the one-cent, replacing Benjamin Franklin, and yielding his place on the red two-center to John Adams and on the purple three-center to Thomas Jefferson. Since Americans spend more than $500,000,000 for postage every year and nearly half of this sum goes for two-cent and three-cent stamps, it's likely that they are going to be more familiar with the looks of their second and third Presidents, John Adams and Thomas Jefferson, than they have ever been before.





It is to be hoped that Millard Fillmore was not a superstitious man, else it might have given him some uncomfortable moments if he could have foreseen that his portrait would appear on the 13-cent stamp! It will be noticed that there is no 23-cent stamp. That's not because of any superstition in regard to that number or any desire to avoid perpetuation of the "23-skiddoo!" tradition Grover Cleveland, who appears on the 22-cent stamp, served two terms in the White House but they were not consecutive. He was defeated by Benjamin Harrison who served one, then "staged a come-back" and was elected for another four-year term So it seemed the logical thing to place his portrait with the dates of his two terms on the 22-cent stamp and place Harrison on the 24-cent issue.



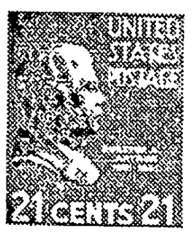
In addition to being the year of the new "Presidential Series" of stamps, 1938 has been a notable one for the number of "commemoratives" that have been issued. Whether 1939 will be equally rich in these reminders of our past remains to be seen. Outstanding among the 1938 "commemoratives" were: The three-cent Constitution stamp issued in connection with the 150th anniversary of the ratification of the United States Constitution by the states. It was first placed on sale at the Philadelphia post office on June 21.

The three-cent Delaware stamp commemorating the 300th anniversary of the landing of the first Swedish and Finnish colonists in this country. It was first placed on sale at Wilmington, Del., on June 27.

The three-cent Northwest Territory Sesquicentennial stamp commemorating the 150th anniversary of the establishment of civil government in the Northwest Territory under the Ordinance of 1787. It had its "first sales" at Marietta, Ohio, on July 15.

The three-cent Iowa Territorial Centennial stamp, commemorating the establishment of the territory of Iowa in 1838. It was first placed on sale at Des Moines on August 24.

The Post Office department has announced four commemorative stamps as a part of the 1939 stamp program. All are of three-cent denomination.

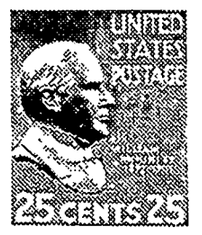


The first to be issued will be in honor of the Golden Gate International exposition in San Francisco and will be released there February 18.

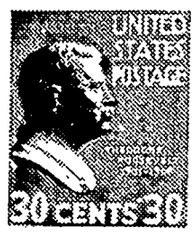
Two stamps are scheduled for April 30, one commemorating the 150th anniversary of George Washington's taking the oath of office as first President at Federal Hall in New York city, April 30, 1789, and the other will be for the New York World's Fair 1939.

The Washington inaugural stamp will be placed on first-day sale in New York but the point of release of the World's Fair stamp has not been determined.

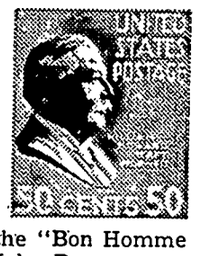
The fourth stamp will commemorate the twenty-fifth anniversary of the opening of the Panama canal. It will be issued August 15 at a first-day sale point to be announced.



The year 1937 was also rich in special stamp issues. Outstanding among them were the "Army-Navy series" of one, two, three, four and five-cent stamps. These stamps were oblong in shape and, in addition to the portraits of military and naval heroes shown in ovals at the right and left, they contained in a middle panel a view of some patriotic shrine or some historic American scene.



The one-cent army stamp bore a view of Mount Vernon, home of Washington, in the center, flanked by portraits of Washington and Gen. Nathanael Greene of Revolutionary war fame. The one-cent navy stamp showed portraits of John Paul Jones, commander of the "Bon Homme Richard," and John Barry, commander of the "Lexington," our two outstanding sea captains during the Revolution. Between them was a picture of typical warships of that period.



The two-cent army stamp displayed portraits of Gen. Andrew Jackson and Gen. Winfield Scott with a view of Jackson's home, the Hermitage, near Nashville, Tenn , in the center. The two-cent navy stamp pictured Commodore Stephen Decatur, hero of the War with the Barbary Pirates, and Commodore Thomas MacDonough, hero of the Battle of Lake Champlain. The three-cent army stamps pictured the Union generals, Sherman, Grant and Sheridan and the navy stamp Admirals David G. Farragut and David Porter.

The four-cent army stamp honored Gen. Robert E Lee and Gen. "Stonewall" Jackson of the Confederate army and the navy stamp depicted Admirals Sampson, Dewey and Schley, of the Spanish-American war.

Only four women have had the distinction of having their portraits appear on our postage stamps. Since Martha Washington was the first "First Lady of the Land," it was fitting that she should be the first woman to be thus honored. She also has the distinction of being the only woman whose portrait continues to appear on our postage—it is on the one and one-half cent stamp in the new series.

The other three women who share the honor with Martha Washington are:

Isabella, queen of Spain, patron of Columbus. In the first commemorative stamp series ever issued by the Post Office department—the Columbian Exposition set of 1893—one of the stamps reproduced the familiar picture of Isabella pledging her jewels to aid the Italian navigator.

Pocahontas, the Indian "princess" who saved the life of Capt. John Smith and later married John Rolfe, a Virginia planter. Her portrait appeared on a stamp in the Jamestown commemorative series of 1907.

Molly Pitcher, the heroine of the Battle of Monmouth in the Revolution. A picture showing her serving a cannon, after her artilleryman husband had been disabled, appeared on a stamp in 1928 commemorating the sesquicentennial of the Battle of Monmouth.

Incidentally, there are six women in the United States who can send personal letters through the mails without paying postage on them—something which not even the President of the United States nor members of his household can do. They are the widows of six of our Presidents—Mrs. Frances Folsom Cleveland Preston, Mrs. Mary Scott Lord Dimmick Harrison, Mrs. Edith Kermit Carew Roosevelt, Mrs. Helen Herron Taft, Mrs Edith Bolling Galt Wilson, and Mrs. Grace Goodhue Coolidge—all of whom enjoy a special franking privilege.

In the first year of the 19th century, congress granted such privilege to Martha Washington, then a widow. This frank was to last until her death, and Mrs. Washington used it for but one month over two years, when she died. Letters with her signature on the outside, instead of the usual postage, are rare, despite the fact that Mrs. Washington had a wide acquaintance.

The "charming Dolly Madison" was the second widow of a President to receive this special frank. She wrote the word "free," and most of the later privileges followed her example.

Anna Harrison, wife of the short-lived President William Henry Harrison, used her frank for 23 years; Louisa Catherine Adams, wife of John Quincy Adams, four years. Sarah Polk used her frank the longest of any President's widow, 41 years and seven months. Mary Lincoln used her frank for 16 years and five months, but because of the demand for Lincolnian specimens are very difficult to procure.

Lucretia Randolph Garfield enjoyed her frank the second longest, 26 years and two months. Julia Dent Grant used her privilege for 16 years and 10 months.

Frances F. Cleveland Preston received her frank in 1909 and is still using it. When she married Mr. Preston in 1914, the postmaster general informed her that as the frank was for lifetime use, she could continue the privilege, merely adding Preston to the name.

Mary Lord Harrison, wife of Benjamin Harrison, received her frank the same day as Mrs. Cleveland. Mrs. Harrison was not actually a "First Lady of the Land"; she married President Harrison four years after he had left the White House. She is still living and using her frank.

One of the most common specimens to be found in the mail is that of Edith Carew Roosevelt, who has made much use of her privilege.

Mrs. Harding had the shortest use of her frank, 10 months, lacking three days.

Mrs. Wilson received the franking privilege several weeks after Mrs. Harding received hers, although she had preceeded the latter in occupying the Executive Mansion. Mrs. Wilson is the only one of the Presidents' widows to use a facsimile, which she does to the disappointment of the collectors.

Ink Spots And Spatters

Spring must be here! Friday we saw a robin in front of the Times office Of course we expect our readers to take this with a grain of salt, but we have witnesses to prove it. "Billy" Grosshuesch, the preacher's son, and Ye Editor's better half and our son, Ray Jr., were called to verify the statement. The robin is either one of the first arrivals on the wings of spring, or he has been so far north during the summer that he thinks this is the southland. Anyway, the office force put some feed out and he seems to enjoy himself in this climate. Just another proof that North Iowans are wasting their money going south this year! You can't fool the birds.

Klemme is "Little, But Lively," according to the slogan adorning the lighted signs near the edge of town Klemme is always doing something different and this year the school and community will observe "Twelfth Night." This is an old custom observed many years ago when Christmas trees were gathered and a huge bon-fire built and as the flames went skyward from the brilliantly burning, crackling trees, Christmas carols were sung. That old custom will be revived in Klemme and the "Twelfth Night" celebration will be held on Saturday night, January 7th. The entire community is invited to attend the festivities.

The Republican party which took over the reins at the State House with the beginning of the new year, are endeavoring to fulfill some of their pre-election promises to cut down on unnecessary expense Eighty-eight offices, established by the Democratic administration have been abandoned and will save the taxpayers an estimated $175,000 or more. All of these offices had been established since the republicans lost control six years ago. The new administration is working in the right direction.

Anything can happen in a ball game. Look how hopeless the picture appeared Monday in the Rose Bowl game at Pasedena. With Duke leading 3 to 0 and with less than two minutes to play Southern California was unable to push over a touch-down on the nine yard line, and then, less than one minute later a fourth string substitute went into the game for Cal and shot three accurate passes to score a touchdown. And then another sub booted over the extra point and Southern California lead 7 to 3. ### VAGABONDS TAKE TWIN BILL FROM ROCKWELL CAGERS

Will Play Double Header Again Next Monday Night

The Klemme Vagabonds took two more games Tuesday night, both from Rockwell cagers. The Vagabond reserves had a field night and trounced the Rockwell reserves 48 to 14. R. Keeper, Paul and Drake hit the hoop seemingly at will and scored 16, 12 and 11 points respectively. The action was considerably livened up in the last quarter when the locals did a bit of clowning. We marvel yet at the workmanlike pose of Orville Stokesbary as he flipped the ball to a Rockwell guard rushing in to cover the play. P. S. He made the basket on Orville's toss.

Different Story With Varsity

The varsity had no such easy pickings in their game and had to work all the way, with first one side and then the other taking the lead. Rockwell held a 22 to 21 lead at the half but the Vagabonds came back strong and built up a seven point lead . . . only to see it eaten up by the end of the third quarter. The last quarter was a ding dong battle climaxed when A. Keeper slipped in a short one from under the basket to put the locals out in front by two points, and Kilgore added a free throw to make the final score 41 to 38.

Lemke and A. Keeper looked best in the scoring column for Klemme, getting 14 and 12 points, respectively. Kilgore and Willis got 8 and 7.

McMonagle led the Rockwell offense and was high man for the evening with 17 points.

Double Header

Next Monday night, January 9, the Vagabonds will play another double header with the reserves taking on the Alexander quintet and the varsity playing Decker Bros. of Mason City. Plenty of action is promised for these two games.

He had surrendered his driving license when he was convicted of the previous offense.

IT'S WIND, MOISTURE THAT HURT CATTLE—NOT COLD

Wintering dairy heifers is not a matter of keeping them warm but providing a dry shelter where wind and rain cannot whip in to chill and wet the animals, asserts C. Y. Cannon of the Dairy Husbandry Department at Iowa State College.

Cattle are fitted by nature to withstand cold better than hot temperatures if their hair and skin are not exposed to moisture or drafts, Cannon explains.

Well fed heifers can be wintered in a three-walled shed with a southern exposure if the building is kept dry.

Milk cows, if well fed and stall watered, will give more milk in the winter if barn temperatures are kept as near freezing (32 degrees F.) as possible.

Feed Silage After Milking To Avoid Off-Flavored Milk

Milk may become tainted and disflavored when dairy cows are fed sorghum, corn or grass silage before they are milked, says C. Y Cannon of the Dairy Husbandry Department at Iowa State College

Silages or other materials that leave a trace of their oder in milk must be given the animal 4 hours before milking since it takes this long for the feed to lose the identity of its oder.

Sorghum silage leaves a particularly offensive flavor in the milk, and farmers selling to a fluid milk market should always feed this after milking.

HORSE NUMBERS DECLINE

The number of horses and mules on farms continued to decline during 1938, and this downward trend probably will continue for several more years. Colt production has been increasing in recent years, but is still to small to replace the number of horses that die or are sold off farms each year. During 1938 the prices of horses and mules were the highest in relation to the prices of all farm products since 1916. This favorable price situation probably will result in a further increase in colt production in 1939 and 1940.

Ground Sorghum Tops Nearly Equal To Corn And Cob Meal

Ground sorghum tops, including the grain and head, are nearly equal to corn and cob meal as a ration for fattening cattle when fed in somewhat limited amounts, explains C. C. Culbertson of the Animal Husbandry Department at Iowa State College.

When the tops are ground in a roughage mill, they are worth about 85 per cent as much as shelled corn for fattening cattle.

Best results are obtained if the ground tops are used to replace probably not more than one-half of the corn in the grain mixture since the tops are bulkier and are not as palatable as corn.

en-Age Girl Outfitted In Garb of Modish Wools

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

AFTER Yuletide holidays, so carefree and so joyous, then hat? Ask the teen-age and the eb-deb, they know. It's back to hool for them with an outfitting of ew clothes. A dress, a coat and a uit as pictured give the correct nswer. Starred for youthful simicity and gay young charm, this ason's smart wool costumes for teen-age are ready to go places nd do things with utmost chic and arm.

Fine, soft-textured woolens, nicese adaptable to any occasion, and urdy enough to take plenty of ear and tear, make gay little ocks, for classroom, sports and ter-school wear as well as versae action-built jacket-and-skirt cosmes, nonchalant sports coats and mal fur-trimmed coats.

The lightweight wool frock for allwear is appearing this season in y number of attractive versions. eer wool crepe, fine wool flannel its lovely glowing colors, soft bbit-and-wool mixtures, intriguing vel weaves and the ever-popular ol knits are distinctively tailored chic little frocks that are as flating as they are correct.

The plaid dress with all-round ated skirt is a school-girl favor-

The appropriately youthful iety of bright plaid is reflected in winsome frock in the accomnying illustration. This youthful rsion of the classic shirtwaist type of lightweight wool in a gaily colful plaid, accenting a bold red th navy and white. The smart ttons and belt are navy leather. ort sleeves are fulled on for flatng shoulder effect.

mportant in the teen-age wardbe are the wool jacket-and-skirt ts designed for all-occasion wear. rrect for traveling, country, cams or town wear, they are distinguished by smart simplicity of line with accent on fabric and color. Fine wool tweeds in subdued or bright shades, smooth wool flannels, tailor-minded twills and worsteds are all favored for these versatile costumes which are designed to be worn with little silk blouses for dress or with sporting high-neck wool sweaters for casual wear. Pleats share honors with stitched gored constructions in built-for-action skirts. For the college-minded jacket-suit pictured a nubbly wool tweed in soft rose-beige is used, with brown buttons and brown leather belt for smart contrast. The double pointed pockets are clever and decorative.

Costumes that contrast jacket to skirt have made a tremendous "hit." Suits are selling with two jackets, one matching the skirt, the other in a vivid plaid or stripe wool that picks up the color of the skirt.

Color is important in the soft wool fleeces and sturdy tweeds are used for tailored all-purpose coats for the younger set. Luscious wine shades and rich greens vie for popularity with the traditional neutral shades. Deep browns are good and navy is still popular. Styles vary from the comfortable and correct polo coat type single breasted and belted, to the boxy swagger or the high-buttoned semi-fitted reefer type. The fleecy coat pictured has a high-rolled wolf collar worn well up to show the squared shoulder line of the sleeves. A leather belt and the large buttons are in dark brown to contrast the deep green of the coat.

The teen-age girl's wardrobe will not be complete unless it includes a jaunty tip-tilted feathered hat together with a youthful plaid flannel dress as pictured in the inset below. The blouse is enlivened with shining starlike buttons by La Mode and a pert sharkskin Peter Pan collar and cuff set.

Brown Takes Lead In Late Fashions

Brown, despite annual predictions to the contrary, this year made a sweeping campaign in the fashion collection and, if the forecast holds good, a large part of feminine wardrobes this winter will be made up of dresses, coats and suits in some shade of brown.

The darker color range includes, first of all, those rather indefinable brown tones which remind one of wine dregs or deep mahogany tones. Quite different are the deep brown costumes which, if made in velvet or downy wool fabrics, can hardly be distinguished from black.

Bolero Theme in New Silhouette

A new departure in the bolero theme is the very short dress top that pulls on over the head like a sweater. It is, as a matter of fact, of bolero inspiration except that it is closed up the front instead of left open jacket fashion. The beauty of this new fashion is that it has a tendency to slenderize the waistline below, giving width at the top of the figure and extending out at bustline. Some of these new pull-on boleros are prettily braided and embroidered.

Lingerie Note

There is a definite trend toward high necklines and short sleeves in lingerie.

PETER COMMENDED AND REBUKED

LESSON TEXT—Matthew 16:13-25.
GOLDEN TEXT—Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God.—Matthew 16:16.

"What think ye of Christ?" This question, which was asked by Jesus Himself (Matt. 22: 42), is the touchstone that tries men, and churches, organizations, and movements. The answer to it determines character, condition, and destiny. As we study the life of Peter and see how he responded to the question of Jesus, let us not fail to apply the truth to ourselves and to those to whom we minister. This is indeed

I. A Crucial Question (vv. 13-16).

With His crucifixion now only six months away our Lord in preparation for it is about to make a more definite claim to Messiahship, and thus to establish the truth in the minds of His disciples. He therefore asks this all-important question about Himself.

First, it is a general query, "Whom do men say that I am?" The answer (v. 14) indicates that the common opinion concerning Christ was a very high one. He had made an impression on the people of His time, and this has been true down through the ages. Even those who do not believe on Him admit that He was "the ideal representative and guide to humanity," or the person before whom "everyone would kneel." But beautiful tributes to His character and leadership are worse than meaningless unless they lead to a personal confession of Him as Lord and Saviour.

The question becomes personal as He asks, "Whom do ye say that I am?" That question no one can escape. We cannot refuse to answer. Neutrality is impossible. Whatever we do or say, or do not do or say, is a decision.

Peter's answer is really the sum and substance of Christian doctrine. He recognized Him as the Messiah, the fulfillment of all Hebrew prophecy, and as the Son of the Living God, the Redeemer and Savior of men, the One in whom centers all Christian faith.

II. A Divine Revelation (vv. 17-20).

Peter had been ready to be taught by the Holy Spirit, and therefore made a confession of Christ which was not conceived in the mind of a man but was a conviction born of the Spirit of God (cf. I Cor. 12:3).

Upon Peter's confession, which was thus really a divine revelation of the person and work of Christ, the Church is established, Christ Himself being the chief cornerstone (I Pet. 2:7) with Peter himself as one of the apostles built into its very foundation (Eph. 2:20).

Note that Christ calls it "my church." It is His Body, and He as the Head rules over it. The gates of Hades, that is, the wicked powers of the unseen world, while they now seemingly have great power against the Church, shall not ultimately prevail. We have a victorious Christ.

The giving of the keys, and the authority to bind or loose have been variously interpreted. It would seem to be clear, however, that this was not intended to be any personal power to be used by Peter, and quite evidently not to be transferred by him to others. It was rather the authority to admit men into the kingdom of God as they fulfill His provisions for entrance, and to declare that those who do not enter by way of Christ must be forever barred from its sacred precincts.

III. The Shadow of the Cross (vv. 21-25).

The cross of Christ casts its shadow over the little group as Jesus begins to show to His disciples (v. 21) what He is to suffer as the Saviour of the world. The city of Jerusalem exalted to heaven by its opportunities and privileges is to be the place where He is to be nailed to the tree. "Where roses ought to bloom, sin has often planted thorns," Peter in an outburst of affectionate folly tries to hinder Christ from going to the cross, and becomes for the moment the servant of Satan. He "meant well," but it is not enough to have good intentions.

The cross of Christ calls for the cross of the Christian (v. 24). Note well that this does not refer to little acts of so-called "self-denial," but rather to the denial of self. It means that self-will is set aside and God's will becomes paramount in the life V. 24). It means the abandonment of selfish motives and desires, the losing of life for Christ's sake. Thus only do we find the real fulfillment of life (v. 25).

For God to Decide.

There are those who say, and that continually, that life is too short. That depends. What are you doing with it? For some things it is; for others it is not. In any case, it is not for us to make any declaration on that point. God knows whether it is or is not, too short. And it is safe to leave that matter with him. —Christian Conservator.

WHAT to EAT and WHY

C. Houston Goudiss Offers New Year's Resolutions Concerning Foods and Nutrition. Suggests How to Help Make Your Family Healthier and Happier

By C. HOUSTON GOUDISS

IT HAS been customary for a long time to mark the beginning of a new year with the ringing of bells, with merry-making, and with the hope expressed to one's friends that they will enjoy greater health, happiness and prosperity in the forthcoming twelve months.

Though greetings are usually exchanged in a spirit of gayety, the occasion frequently does, as indeed it should, have an undercurrent of solemnity. For it is quite fitting that we should view the close of one year and the beginning of another as both an Ending and a Beginning, even though we recognize that life goes along in an unbroken stream. The magic hour of midnight may well mark the end of certain of our mistakes, and the beginning of greater wisdom in acting, thinking, and living.

It seems to me that the week in which we celebrate New Year's is a particularly appropriate time for mothers to resolve to take stock of the program of daily living that they have outlined for their families; and if necessary, to alter it so that every member may gain a more generous share of well-being and contentment.

Questions for a Homemaker

I believe that every homemaker owes it to her family to pause for a few moments at this season to look backwards along the road that she and her family have traveled in recent months.

Have you taken advantage of the knowledge offered by modern nutritional science? Can you conscientiously say with conviction that you have given your husband and children all the different food elements that are necessary for buoyant, radiant health?

If you have grown as you should in the past year . . . and no homemaker who is doing a really first class job ever remains static; she moves with the times . . . then it is inevitable that there has been a gradual change in the character of the food that you have put on your table three times a day. But can you feel confident those meals have been right in every respect? Have they included the necessary protein, fats, carbohydrates? Have they included at least 12 minerals; the six known vitamins; and sufficient bulk or cellulose to help maintain regular health habits?

Time to Take Inventory

Do not be too discouraged if you cannot answer yes to all of these questions, because the chances are that many other homemakers may also find it necessary to give a partially negative answer. Mothers especially are busy people, and many of them feel that it is difficult to keep pace, as they would like to do, with the fast-moving science of nutrition.

Now, during this season which brings us the beginning of a new year, now is a time—after taking inventory of what you have or have not done—to look forward, to survey the road that lies ahead.

Before every wife and mother hangs the curtain of the future that will be slowly drawn aside, revealing the destiny of herself, her husband and her children, as the future becomes the present, as tomorrow becomes today.

And as your loved ones travel the road of life, it is you who have it in your power to help them attain strong vigorous bodies; alert, efficiently working minds.

Now is the time for you to determine to make the power of food their power, so that they shall not flag in their travels along the highway, but draw new strength for each day's journey every time they sit down at your table, sit down, as I have said before, to Life!

The Tremendous Power of Food

What they are going to be tomorrow is indeed influenced by what they eat today, for there never was a truer statement than that man is what he eats. And that does not mean that physical prowess and mental superiority may result only when the table is set with luxuries! On the contrary, malnutrition, which means not necessarily under-nutrition but improper nutrition, is found in the homes of the wealthy as well as in the homes of the underprivileged. The power of food is determined, not so much by what you spend, as by what you choose.

One need not spend a great deal for food to provide the milk and other dairy products, fruits and vegetables that should be consumed in abundance. There is always evaporated milk for those who do not care to buy bottled milk, or who prefer to use it as a supplement to bottled milk. And since large numbers of fruits and vegetables are now in season practically throughout the year, it is almost always possible to choose varieties of these mineral- and vitamin-bearing foods that are inexpensively priced.

Be It Resolved:

I should, therefore, like to urge every homemaker to make at least one New Year's resolution: to resolve that she will build her family diet in 1939 first of all around the protective foods, milk, eggs, fruits and vegetables.

It will be my privilege each week to help interpret for you the amazing discoveries of nutritional science; and to show how you can utilize the newer knowledge of nutrition to help increase the mental and physical efficiency of your family.

Together then, let us resolve to travel along the highroad of well-being in 1939.

Questions Answered

Mrs. K. Mc.N.—You should include at least two rich sources of each of the vitamins in your menus every day. It is also important to serve some raw food, as for example, a salad, in planning the diet of persons in normal health. Use fruits liberally and provide a pint of milk for each adult, a quart for every child, either as a beverage or in cooked dishes.

HOW to SEW

By RUTH WYETH SPEARS

"DEAR MRS. SPEARS: I have long been wanting a taffeta spread for a double bed. I figure that, if I can make one from 10 yards of 39-inch taffeta, it will cost about half as much as one of the same quality ready made Will you be good enough to tell me how to cut the material so there will be no waste? This is important as I must economize. M G."

Here are cutting dimensions for a double bedspread of 39 or 40-inch material. You will need a little less than your 10 yards—9¾ yards will be enough, and this makes the spread long enough to cover the pillows nicely. Cut the center panel first, then divide the material that is left as shown in the upper diagram. Join the two pieces of ruffle material to make one long piece, then divide it evenly; for the two ruffles. These cutting dimensions allow generous seams. Enough material may be taken from the seam edges to cover cords for welted seams if desired. A very narrow machine stitched hem should be used at the bottom of the ruffles.

Full directions for making welted seams are contained in Book 1, offered herewith. There are also directions in this book for making bedspreads of 36-inch cotton material. Today's lesson is not in either of the books offered here, so be sure to clip and save it for reference.

NOTE: Mrs. Spears' Book 2—Gifts, Novelties and Embroidery, has helped thousands of women to use odds and ends of materials and their spare time to make things to sell and to use. Book 1—SEWING, for the Home Decorator, is full of inspiration for every homemaker. These books make delightful gifts. Mrs. Spears will autograph them on request. Crazy-patch quilt leaflet is included free with every order for both books. Books are 25 cents each. Address Mrs. Spears, 210 S. Desplaines St., Chicago, Ill.

AROUND the HOUSE

Items of Interest to the Housewife

Color for Foods.—Grated raw carrots give cabbage salad added color and flavor. Minced green peppers or pimentos will do the same for creamed potatoes, turnips, cauliflower, lima beans or corn.

Cleaning Burnt Pans. — Burnt saucepans can be made bright again without scouring. Sprinkle the burn with salt, leaving it for some hours and then wash, rubbing the burn gently. Unless the burn has actually eaten into the surface of the pan it will come away with the salt.

Sift the Sugar.—Always sift sugar before using. To get all grains alike. You will then have a cake of finer texture.

Storing Steel Articles.—Put a lump of freshly burned lime in the drawer or box when storing away steel articles and it will prevent them from rusting.

Safeguarding the Baby.—Inspect baby's toys before putting them in his crib or pen to be sure there are no loose fragments, such as eyes, buttons, bits of wood, etc., that might be pulled off and swallowed.

Fire Hazard.—The basement is one of the chief danger places in the house from the fire standpoint. It should be kept free from accumulations of inflammable materials such as paper, old boxes, oily and paint-soaked rags, and trash.

How to Buy Spices.—In buying spices choose the smaller packages, for spice must be replaced often as the essential oils evaporate. Don't allow your spice to waste its sweetness on the air. Keep cans and jars tightly closed. If your gingerbread has not been up to par, if your pickled peaches are flat, the answer probably is in the spice jar.

Changing Dances

From 1776 to 1911, American social dancing was virtually confined to six dances: the polka, reel, square dance, minuet, waltz and two-step, reports Collier's. From 1911 to 1938, more than 25 new dances have been introduced, among them being the turkey trot, grizzly bear, Texas tommy, bunny hug, hesitation, tango, maxixe, one-step, Castle walk, fox trot, Charleston, black bottom, Lindy hop, rumba and the big apple.

Are Women Better Shoppers Than Men?

GRANTING a woman's reputation for wise buying, let's trace the methods by which she has earned it. Where does she find out about the advantages and details of electric refrigeration? What tells her how to keep the whole household clean—rugs, floors, bathroom tiling—and have energy left over for golf and parties? How does she learn about new and delicious entrees and desserts that surprise and delight her family? And where does she discover those subtleties of dress and make-up that a man appreciates but never understands?

Why, she reads the advertisements. She is a consistent, thoughtful reader of advertisements, because she has found that she can believe them—and profit thereby. Overlooking the advertisements would be depriving herself of data continuously useful in her job of Purchasing Agent to the Family.

For that matter, watch a wise man buy a car or a suit or an insurance policy. Not a bad shopper himself! He reads the advertisements, too!

Time To Look Ahead...

Those who are looking ahead for 1939 know that their future success depends largely upon the soundness of their present planning. It is important to be ready to make progress when the track is clear. On the other hand, the caution signals need to be carefully regarded.

A good banking connection is always an aid to progress. It is a valuable asset to any individual or to any business. Farmers, business men, and others are invited to discuss their banking requirements with our officers. The New Year will bring new opportunities. A connection here will help to turn them to advantage—and to profit.

Twelfh Night Celebration Sponsored By Civic Club Drew Large Crowd

TWELFTH NIGHT CELEBRATION DREW LARGE CROWD SATURDAY EVE

Huge Pile Of Christmas Trees Burned As Carols Were Sung By Crowd

Klemme's first celebration of an ancient custom, Twelfth Night, is now history.

A large crowd of several hundred people gathered near the City Park Saturday evening to help celebrate the old custom of burning trees on the twelfth night after Christmas. A huge pile of trees had been gathered in Klemme and many more were brought in from the country for the occasion.

The Klemme School Band was on hand and played several numbers. Art Wellemeyer, in charge of the program, gave a short explanation of the old custom and Mayor Grange applied a lighted torch to the pile of trees which blazed up brightly and sent millions of sparkling, burning needles high into the air.

Children carrying lighted torches added color to the scene, and as the flames were leaping high Mrs. E. G. Schaeffer and her group of Girl Scouts led in community singing and the singing of Christmas carols.

Chief "Slim" Brinkman and his force of firemen, were on the scene with the new fire truck to guard against any possible fire hazards. Spotlights on the truck were played on the unusual scene.

The committee in charge of the arrangements, Lee Ridder, Ira Overholt and Art Wellemeyer, were well pleased with the response of the community in co-operating to make the first observance here of Twelfth Night a success.

The committee is already laying plans for a bigger and better celebration next year when they plan to have a hundred or more torches in the parade and an enlarged program at the tree burning festivity.

Shamrocks Add Two More Wins

SHAMROCKS WIN OVER GOODELL IN HARD GAME

Meservey Is Victim In Non-Conference Tilt Here Tuesday Night

Coach A. L. Kingery's Klemme High School Shamrocks journeyed to Goodell last Thursday night and barely nosed out the Goodell High School team 21 to 17.

Goodell took an early lead and was ahead 7 to 4 at the quarter, but the Shamrocks were not to be denied and by the half-time had tied the score at 8 apiece. In the last half the Shamrocks kept right on moving up on their opponents and the end of the game found them out in front 21 to 17.

Allen Barz, who was sick during the game, led the scoring for the Shamrocks with 8 points. Katter got 6, Kluckhohn 5, and Grosshuesch 2 to complete the Klemme scoring.

Boller and Caroles looked best for Goodell with 7 and 6 points, respectively.

Junior High Triumphs

In a game that started much the same as the varsity game the Klemme Junior High team came out on top over the Goodell Junior High 27 to 13. Trailing 2 to 4 at the quarter the locals jumped into a 13 to 8 lead at the half and were never headed throughout the rest of the game.

Grosshuesch looked best for Klemme with 14 points, while Conwell and Van Buskirk each got 5 for Goodell.

Defeat Meservey

Tuesday night the Shamrocks defeated the Meservey team 22 to 9. while the Little Shamrocks took the Meservey Reserves 32 to 1. Both Klemme teams played with revamped lineups due to illness of members of the squad.

Playing without the services of Barz and Grosshuesch, the Shamrocks had a tough time getting started and barely succeeded in gaining a 6 to 4 lead at the half. The second half was a different story, however, and sparked by Kluckhohn, the Shamrocks began to forge ahead and finally won out.

Kluckhohn led the scoring for the Shamrocks with 13 points. Wicks got 5 and Katter 4. The Meservey scoring was evenly divided.

Little Shamrocks Win

The Little Shamrocks, playing without Gibbs and Buseman, whipped the Meservey Reserves 32 to 1. Schoenwetter and Zabilka led the scoring with 14 and 8 points respectively. Gaetzke made Meservey's lone point.

Will Play Woden

Friday night, the Shamrocks will take on the Woden fives in a double header on the local floor. Woden is leading the Conference, while Klemme is in second place. A win by the Shamrocks would throw them into the lead as Woden is a game behind in the schedule.

Lets all be out and boost for the team.

It can truly be said she loved her church and was a true and loyal member of the same. The influence of such a good and noble life will ever abide with us along the shores of time. She bid her "loved ones" goodby saying, "Meet me in Heaven," and peacefully entered that "Beautiful City Above." Her husband and one daughter, Miss Esther, preceded her in death.

Powder River, the Stream that's "A Mile Wide and an Inch Deep," Is One of America's Most Famous

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

© Western Newspaper Union.

IF YOU have ever lifted up your eyes to Cloud Peak rearing its majestic head 13,000 feet in the air, or gazed upon Lake De Smet's blue waters that are made bluer still by contrast with the red hills surrounding it . . .

If you have ever known the exhilaration of a swinging gallop across a flower-studded, grassy mountain meadow or have felt your horse's muscles tighten under you as he picked his way along a dim trail that clung precariously to a steep slope of loose shale rock—

If you have ever listened to the winds mourning through the needles of a pine tree or the wild music of a brawling trout stream high up in the Big Horn mountains—

If you have ever stood on "the roof of the world" and breathed deep, deep, deep an intoxicating draught of clear Wyoming air—

If any of this has ever happened to you, then DON'T read Struthers Burt's new book, "Powder River—Let 'er Buck"! illustrated by Ross Santee, the cowboy artist. For it's certain to make you restless and dissatisfied with wherever you are or whatever you're doing; it's bound to make you "homesick" for a land that isn't your home but, once visited, never ceases to pull at your heartstrings.

The latest volume in "The Rivers of America" series, published by Farrar and Rinehart, "Powder River—Let 'er Buck" is the story of that stream which Mr. Burt calls "the most famous river in a state filled with lovely rivers."

"The most famous river in Wyoming? The Powder is the most famous river in the Northwest. Famous now all over the country, its name familiar to thousands who haven't the faintest idea where the river is, or whether it's an actual river or merely an exclamation. A river spoken of with contempt by all who first saw it, whose name has become a battle cry. A shout of encouragement. A cry of derision. A password to a secret society . . . "'Powder River! Let 'er Buck! A Mile Wide and an Inch Deep!'"

"During the last war the Wyoming troops fought under that gonfalon of words, usually just the two words 'Powder River!' Short, sharp, shrill, like the cowboy yell, which is the Confederate yell brought up the Texas Trail with the longhorns, the echo of the coyote added, the last note pitched high and held so that it will carry a long distance. Presently almost the entire United States army in France knew the battle cry . . .

"Wherever men ride bad horses, either for amusement or for money, 'Powder River!' greets them as man and horse turn loose, in wholehearted admiration if the ride is good, or edged with ridicule, the admiration reserved for the horse, if the rider is thrown . . .

"In the most unexpected places they spring out at you. A brand. An open-sesame. A voucher. A visiting card. To repeat . . . a password. In the East. In Europe. In South America. In the Orient. That's all a man has to say to you and the roaring stampedes of cities are soundless for a moment. And you are surprised, and pleased."

All of which explains, in part, why anyone who has ever visited that country grows homesick for it even though it has never been his home. For, as Mr. Burt explains it, Powder River is "above all a symbol of an American way of living which, despite all the varied drama of American life, took hold of the American imagination, and still holds it, as an epitome of perhaps the deepest and most universal expression of this continent's wish. The expression of some longing, some vision, some desire for loneliness in crowds, some inherited horizon line, some nostalgic hope, as close to the American heart as the old life of the South or the lost quiet elms and spare democracy of New England."

Compared to other rivers in America in terms of length, breadth or beauty, the Powder is not an impressive stream. It's only about 300 miles long and a part of that length is due to the way it winds across the landscape. It's not a broad stream—that phrase "a mile wide and an inch deep" is, according to Mr. Burt, "the acidly affectionate description used by those who are its intimates . . . it is by no means a mile wide and it is considerably over an inch deep . . . the phrase possesses the exaggerated truth common to folk description; an exaggerated truth conveying a picture clearer than exactness."

As for beauty, it is "a narrow, yellow, winding little river . . . a small river fierce in the spring floods, coiling, torpid and slow in the summer heat like a rattlesnake, a river spotted with the horrid blackness of quicksands, whose muddy waters the cowboys working on roundups used to clear by dropping a halved cactus into the bucket."

Then why is it important . . . why devote a whole book to it?

Well, it's because "along its banks and in the country it drains, three great national epics have been enacted" and because of this "the Powder River country deserves to be as memorable to Americans, although most of them don't know it, as Marathon is to the Greeks, the walls of Vienna to the Austrians, Charles Martel at Tours to western Europe."

The Epic of the Sioux.

The first of these was the epic of the Sioux. These Indians came originally from the forests of the lower Mississippi. They followed the "Father of Waters" north to the woods of Wisconsin and Minnesota where they strove mightily to oust the Chippewa, or Ojibwa. Then a part of this nation, the Teton Sioux, began to push west, following the buffalo who followed the grass across the greatest grasslands this continent has ever known.

In the "great grass that rippled to the horizon like a green ocean" they found the horses that made them, in the words of Gen. George Crook, "the finest natural cavalry the world has ever seen" and the terror of the northern plains. When they reached the Big Horn mountains of Wyoming they found the Crows, or Absarokas, in possession of the Powder River country and drove them back across the Big Horns into the basin beyond.

"For almost eight decades the Sioux and the buffalo kept inviolate the green strip of country, a hundred and fifty miles long from north to south, 25 to 50 miles wide from east to west, between the Big Horns and the Powder; between the North Platte in Wyoming and the Rosebud in Montana." Then the first thin trickles of the tidal wave of white invasion began to seep into this country. First, there were the trappers and fur traders and next the government exploring expeditions. Then the tide of emigration to Oregon and the California goldfields began to flow along the Oregon Trail which ran through southern Wyoming. That was no direct threat to Sioux supremacy in the Powder River country but when soldiers were sent to protect the emigrants on the Trail there came the inevitable clash between the white man and the red.

Then the Bozeman Trail was laid out as a short cut to the Montana mining camps and it ran through the heart of the Powder River country. Despite the protests of the Sioux, forts were built along this trail. The result was Red Cloud's war which ended in a complete victory for the doughty leader of the Ogalalas in the treaty of 1868. The forts were abandoned and for a few years the Sioux held undisputed possession of their hunting grounds.

But the peace, a precarious one at best, lasted only a few years. Then the whites' violation of the treaty, when the government failed to keep prospectors out of the Black Hills, sent the Sioux on the warpath once more. But this time they were doomed to eventual defeat, despite their one great victory over General George A. Custer and his Seventh cavalry on the Little Big Horn.

The Sioux were cooped up on reservations in North and South Dakota and the cattlemen who had been waiting for the Indians to be driven out, "moved into the Powder River country with their longhorns, and their horses, and their families, and their cowboys. They had found their home . . . this sweet grass country, with the mountains streams coming down from the pines and firs and aspens of the Big Horns, and the grass spreading eastward until it began to thin near the banks of the Powder River."

The Epic of the Cowboy.

Then came the epic of the northwestern cattle business, of the northern cowboy, of the open range. It lasted less than a decade but during that time the great cattlemen lived "a feudal, pastoral life such as has been equaled nowhere else save in Mexico, Texas, the Argentine and Southern California." In 1878, the Powder River country was opened to white settlement and within five years the grass was becoming crowded.

"Blizzards took their toll. Speculation ruined others. Rustlers working on the flanks of the herds, like wolves on the flanks of the vanished dark pools of buffalo, grew powerful." The Johnson County War of 1892 (also known as the "Rustler war") marked the beginning of the end of this epic. The appearance, in turn, of the "nester," (the homesteader), the sheepman, and, finally, the farmer, wrote "finis" to that epic.

"Powder River! A mile wide and an inch deep!"

After the World war, "drouth came, even deadlier than blizzard. Erosion was helped along by its greatest friend, man." So the third epic began. It is the epic of grass and, says Mr. Burt, "it has not yet reached its conclusion. Powder River is still asking the question of what shall happen to the great grazing highlands of America."

Whether or not that question will be answered is still unknown. But the people of the Powder River country have developed a new form of ranching which seems to guarantee that the spirit of the old days shall survive all the changes that have taken place. It is "dude ranching" and its development has done much to spread the fame of Powder River.

"Twenty-five years ago the West laughed at the ladies in 'queer pants' and their male companions who wore neck handkerchiefs wrongly" says Mr. Burt. "The West also regarded with suspicion those ranchers who encouraged these aliens to ruin horses and frighten steers." Now all this is changed."

Mostly because of the growth of the dude ranching industry, "today most Americans know the West and, being Americans, most of them love the West and find there something indigenous, and American and revivifying; and comforting, and magnificent. The 'Wild West,' as it persists in fiction and the movies, for the refreshment of city dwellers who never leave their eastern towns, is based on actuality however distorted and foreshortened and heightened. It is merely 10 years of history, let us say, condensed into two weeks of impossible living. The real West, as it actually was—and still is—yields tales that need no heightening; that are beyond the imaginings of scenarists . . .

"Nor can the 'real West' die; not so long as there are cattle and the herding of them is a business and a way of life. Not so long as there are thousands of miles of loneliness; of plains, of mountains, of forests, and of deserts. And this, the whole of it, is just a simple fact, apart from 'blurbs,' denials, 'dudes,' highways or anything else you care to mention.

"To those who deeply know the West, from the Rio Grande to the Arctic circle, from eastern Oregon to western Nebraska, the West is a fact, a tradition, an intention, a point of view, a blood stream, a way of doing things, and a devotion."

Powder River is a buckaroo; a broken-nosed, insouciant, slightly swaggering old waddie. Powder River is a shadowy figure of a rustler, hawk-eyed and cruel. Powder River is a cavalryman in dusty blue, a fatigue cap pulled down over one eye. Powder River is a Sioux, naked and painted for war. Powder River is a Crow, looking down from the summits of the Big Horns. Powder River is a man of a dim historic race who has left only a few undecipherable signs behind him. For all we know, Powder River may also be a "tall man in shining clothes, feathers on his head." A ghost, speaking Spanish.

Thus does Struthers Burt apostrophize the country whose geography, whose people, whose history, traditions, customs and spirit he has placed within the covers of his book.

On one page of it he also observes: "The Powder River is knee-deep in stories"—this river which is said to be only "an inch deep"! Here are only a few of those yarns:

A well-known western Wyoming brand was obtained in the following manner:

The owner having sold his former brand wanted another one in a hurry. Three times he sent brands in to the state board and three times they were rejected. Finally he telegraphed, "Please send brand of your selection PDQ." The answer came back, "PDQ fine!"

---

They tell a story about old Jim Bridger that on one occasion guiding a detachment of troops under command of a second lieutenant across the Big Horn river in flood, when he made suggestions as to safe swimming, he was told by the embryo officer to mind his own business since he was merely a "civilian scout." The result was that a trooper was drowned. When eventually Bridger got the troops across without further loss, the young officer, a very religious man, knelt down on the bank and loudly and publicly thanked God. Bridger watched him in silence till he had finished, then raised his eyes devoutly to the skies.

"And, pardner," he said confidentially, "he never once mentioned Jim Bridger!"

There is a ghost story on the Powder. The tradition of an army of ghosts, ragged and grim, who had marched up the Bozeman trail a little while before Carrington (who established Fort Phil Kearney of tragic memory), unharmed and hardly noticed, and had disappeared into the mountains of western Montana. The ghosts wore uniforms, whatever remnants were left, of a different color from Carrington's men.

You remember perhaps, Price, the Confederate general who fought in Texas and who was the one Confederate general whose army never surrendered, and who himself fled to Mexico? The story goes that part of Price's army marched up from Texas, marched all those long, arid miles, and then up the Bozeman to the edge of the Bitter Roots, where it scattered and settled.

There seems to be little basis for this story, but it is true that numerous Confederate veterans took up land in western Montana as they did all over the West.

Anyway, it's a nice ghost story.

The Spanish-American war had just been declared and most of the leading bad men of the West at once wanted to enlist in the United States army. Well-wishers persuaded them that discretion is often the better part of patriotism, but some minor hard characters did get to Cuba.

Possibly you remember the famous story told by Col. Theodore Roosevelt in his autobiography of a friend of his in New Mexico who wrote as follows:

"Dear Colonel:

"I'm sure sorry I can't join you and the other boys in your Rough Riders. But, Colonel, I'm in jail. I shot a lady in the eye. It was a mistake, I meant to shoot my wife."

A friend of mine trapping in the mountains came down at dusk to the cabin of an old bachelor whom he knew. The cabin was blazing with light and he heard many voices—in turn—indulging in earnest debate. Looking through the window he saw that the old man was alone. He was holding court, taking the part of judge witnesses, criminal, and counsel for the defense and for the state.

Well, that's the Far West. When a man can't find someone else to argue with, when he's "argument hungry," he splits himself into halves, or quarters, and argues with halves or quarters. We're amoebas when it comes to argument.

HOW TO SEW

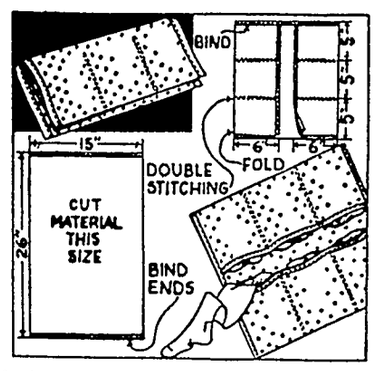
by Ruth Wyeth Spears



THINGS that will have a ready sale at a fair or church bazaar; things that may be made quickly from odds and ends of material on hand; colorful, useful things for gifts—these are the requests that come in the mail.

Here is another suggestion that has stood the test of practical use—a flat case that holds six pairs of stockings. What a relief not to have them all mixed up with underwear and other things in dresser drawers.

This case may be made quickly on the sewing machine. A piece of cretonne or bright ticking or other cotton material of the dimensions given here, and about two yards of contrasting bias binding are the materials needed. The diagrams given here in the sketch, explain each step in cutting and making the case.

If a more elaborate case is desired, silk may be used with ribbon for the bindings. A quilted silk case of this type would make an exquisite gift. Machine quilting may be used for this purpose.

Be sure to clip and save these lessons as they are not in either Book 1 or 2. These books are full of still other useful ideas, with complete cutting and sewing directions for each item clearly illustrated. They save the price of many patterns and you will use them constantly for references and inspiration.

NOTE: Mrs. Spears' Book 2—Gifts, Novelties and Embroidery, has helped thousands of women to use odds and ends of materials and their spare time to make things to sell and to use. Book 1—SEWING, for the Home Decorator, is full of inspiration for every homemaker. These books make delightful gifts. Mrs. Spears will autograph them on request. Books are 25 cents each. Crazy-patch quilt leaflet is included free with every order for both books. Address Mrs. Spears, 210 S. Desplaines St., Chicago, Ill.

Wild Elephant Roundup

Siam's recent wild-elephant roundup, the first in 35 years, was thoughtfully conducted, says Collier's. For the spectators, there was a large grandstand beside the stockade, and portable broadcasting equipment kept them informed of the progress of the hunt. For the captured animals, the stockade contained both drinking and bathing water and, on a safe perch, a group of women who sang lullabies to the beasts to calm them.

Iowa Republicans are staying by their campaign promises to cut down needless extravagance at the State House. Saturday the House Republicans voted to dispense with the services of 33 committee clerks Since the clerks receive $3.80 per day for 100 days, reduction in the number by 33 will save the state $12.540

In 1937 the Democratic House authorized one clerk for each of the 108 members. The Republicans have cut the number to 75, one for each two members except committee chairman Thus 75 clerks will do the work that required 108 clerks last year.

Anything is lable to happen when Klemme and Goodell play basketball A lot of fans were keyed up with excitement before the game and were tense with excitement. But the funniest thing that happened was when Supt. "Hank" Colbreth appeared at the Goodell court with a flock of boys . . . but minus his wife! In the excitement "Hank" had entirely forgotten his better half and had to make a fast trip back to Klemme between games to get his spouse. And . . was his neck red?

And speaking of the basket ball games we wonder if there are enough fans around Klemme to sponsor a move to buy some nice suits for the Grade Basketball team? It's really a shame that that marvelous little team must play on the floor in such tacky looking suits This scribe has a buck to throw in the pot to buy the boys some new suits. Come and get it.

By H. A. Grantham

Opinions expressed herein are those of the writer and should not be construed as reflecting the policy of the Republican State Central Committee, any individual or group, or the newspaper in which this column appears.

MARKING TIME

Although the legislature convened Monday it is unlikely any legislative chores of any consequence will be attempted before Governor George A Wilson and Lieutenant Governor B. B Hickenlooper are formally inaugurated The legislature has many routnie tasks in the organization of its clerical staff and other patronage matters to dispose of and this will consume much of their time prior to the inauguration creemonies Thursday. Of course, there is no reason why the introduction of bills could not begin at once but most legislators will be anxious to hear the Governor's view as indicated by his inaugural address The address will be delivered about 2 30 p. m Thursday, January 12th.

REORGANIZATION

The bin question on Capitol Hill and in the places where legislators (and others) gather is the how and when of the long discussed reorganization and consolidation plan which formed the basis of the Republican campaign Reorganization in some form is certain, the big question to be answered is how and where. It is this big question that will focus unusually wide attention to Governor Wilson's inaugural address Thursday afternoon. The address will be broadcast over Station WHO and news services as well as most state newspapers are making arrangements to get this historic address before the people with all speed. Governor Wilson himself has been reticent and no advance tips as to what he may say are likely to leak. In all proonbility the Governor will view objectives, leaving method and recourse to the legislature.

NEW OFFICERS

Newspaper reporters loosed a sigh of relief Tuesday when all the newly elected Repulican state officers took over their offices. For weeks the news men have had to write of these officers as State Treasurer-elect W. G C Bagley, etc Now they can condense the title to State Treasurer Bagley, etc The new officers entered upon their new duties amid flowers and good wishs—and a steady stream of Job hunters. Republican headquareers in the Savery Hotel, as well as the law office of Governor Wilson and Polk County Republican Headquarters, have during the weeks since November 8th struggled with these thousands of hopefuls No administration in years has had to cope with such a throng and now that the new officers are in they can no longer escape actual contact with this endless line of anxious patriots.

ANYTHING, PLEASE

While many of these job hunters have concentrated upon some definite post the greater number are trying to hunt big game with a shotgun. They petition for anything in any department and scatter their applications promiscuously in the hope that one may take root somewhere The new state officers are preceeding cautiously. For the most part, perhaps it could be said with a single exception. few political debts have been paid in the major appointments. The first Republican administration in six years is determined to make a record that will stand close examination two years hence Important executive have been made more often than not upon merit and experience. However, there are literally thousands of jobs still to be filled of varying degree of importance and it is possible requirements and qualifications will be less drastic as time passes.

MAJOR SPOTS

Somewhat overlooked by many but the cagiest politicians is the fact that many major appointments and hundreds of a minor character will not come up for attention until about July 1st. In time to obtain senate confirmation Governor Wilson will announce appointments of Commissioners to the Liquor Control Commission, the Highway Commission, the Board of Control, the Board of Assessment and review, the Parole Board, Department of Insurance, Unemployment Commission, Conservation Commission, and others. The Governor will probably not announce his choices for these major posts until about thirty days before the legislature adjourns. These are for the most part bipartisan boards and no great shift in personnel is expected before the new Republican members take over on July 1st.

IOWA FBI

Attorney General Fred Everett's choice of R. W. Nebergall as Chief of the State Bureau of Investigation is being taken by many as the first step in the Attorney General's rumored intention to fashion the bureau as much after the Federal Bureau of Investigation as circumstances and appropriations will permit The new Bureau Chief is a personal friend of J Edgar Hoover, FBI chief, and is known to have been an applicant for the Iowa post with the full and active support of Hoover. While he has never actually taken the tests and examinations of the FBI, his friendship with Hoover has made it possible to study Federal methods and unofficially acquire much of the training This particular angle only partially influenced Attorney General Everett in his choice of Nebergall The new Iowa chief has a fine record as student and teacher of criminal investigations in his own right. Although he has not said so in words, Everett's known admiration for the Federal bureau, its methods and strict qualifying characteristics, is expected to influence future appointments to the State Bureau of Investigation.

HICKENLOOPER

While patronage matters plague Governor Wilson and other state officers to the point of exasperation, Lieutenant Governor Bourke B. Hickenlooper looks on with a smile of sympathy. Unlike his more unfortunate associates the Lieutenant Governor has only six or eight appointments to make—senate page boys. Even so, the Lieutenant Governor looks upon his few appointments as extremely serious. These page boys will probably rank in age from sixteen to eighteen years Some will be from Des Moines. Others will e brought from other points in the state and to bring youngsters of this age to the Capitol City carries considerable responsibility.

WHO'S NEWS THIS WEEK

By LEMUEL F. PARTON

NEW YORK. — Once, at an alley's end in Guayaquil, this reporter, then young and indiscreet, became involved in an argument with certain of the native citizenry, who insisted that North Americans ate only dog meat. Your correspondent knew only enough Spanish to get him into trouble, and was using it diligently to that end when Dr. Robert Entwistle, once of Philadelphia, later a student and practitioner of tropical medicine along the west coast fever ports, appeared. He calmed the excitement and saved his countryman much embarrassment and possibly a broken head. It was like magic, the way he piped everybody down. They loved and trusted him and he was their authority on everything from international relations to beri-beri.

So, today, it seemed almost like old news to read in a dispatch from Lima that it was an American doctor and not a statesman, who, possibly more than any other one man, has induced respect and good will for this country, down around and below the equator. With a number of other American doctors, Dr. John D. Long, of the United States Public Health service, has been carrying on a fight against the bubonic plague, malaria, chagres fever and other tropical curses in Ecuador, Brazil, Peru, Chile and other countries. He holds decorations from half a dozen South American countries. He and his colleagues have served only in response to specific requests for their services, and the sum of their efforts has been to allay ill will, dispel prejudice and misunderstanding and promote friendly relations.

Doctor Long, 64 years old, quiet, precise, unassuming, is a typical American professional man, whose home town was Mt. Pleasant, Pa. After his graduation from the medical school of the University of Pennsylvania, he entered the national public health service, became its assistant surgeon, and, assigned to the Philippines, won eminence in his profession in his work in sanitation and in fighting disease. In 1926, he was loaned to the Chilean government for a similar encounter there.

In this writer's observation of South American countries, particularized instances of civilized behavior, fair dealing and regard for native traditions and amenities, once the fear of predatory designs had been overcome, were effective where all else failed, including our most eloquent offerings of official friendship.

THE New York aquarium gets three African fish which have high foreheads and bigger brains in proportion to their size than any other creatures below the Primates. This makes them skittish and doesn't seem to get them anything, though they manage to keep out of aquaria and frying pans. These are the first ever brought to this country.

Dr. Charles M. Breder Jr. plans to go to Africa as soon as possible to check up on their I. Q. The ancient Egyptians revered and protected them, in the belief that their huge brain cavities were inhabited by the souls of departed men. Doctor Breder thinks a study of their intelligence, if any, in relation to their out-size brain, might be enlightening.

Doctor Breder was a boy ichthyologist at Newark, where the family was apt to find the bathtub full of minnows and sticklebacks. In his examination for a biologist's job in the fisheries bureau, he confounded his elders and beat out Ph. D. entrants in the competition. He was assistant director of the Aquarium for 14 years and became director a year ago.

Doctor Breder is said to rank all other scientists. He is 40 years old, a fragile, clerical-looking man, with blue eyes and yellow hair. But his appearance is deceptive. On the Richard Oglesby Marsh expedition, to the Chucunaque river country in southern Panama, in 1924, in which Dr. J. L. Baer, of the Smithsonian institution lost his life, Doctor Breder came through swimmingly, with no fever or beri-beri and many new fish. Its name, Anchovia Chucunaque Breder, is short body type, five-sixteenths of an inch longer than the fish.

Poise Begins With Proper Care of Feet

By PATRICIA LINDSAY

YOU'VE seen them, perhaps you are one of them. Women smartly dressed limping along with tortured expressions on their faces, or surreptitiously slipping off their shoes for a few moments of foot ease! All their poise destroyed, all facial beauty sacrificed for shoes that are in fashion.

Ill fitting shoes are the chief offenders to foot health. It is appalling how few women have good feet, and rare is she with beautiful feet! Wrong lasts have deformed them, and constant constriction in leather since infancy has weakened their muscle tone.

Look at the shoe you are wearing. If it is run down badly at the heel, if the lining is worn through, the toe scuffed or the sides bulging it is a safe bet that you are not fitted correctly.

Your Shoe Tells The Story

To begin with, a good shoe has a straight inner line which keeps the big toe straight and prevents a bunion from forming. It should be wide enough to give your toes ample room for gripping when you walk, and the heel should allow good posture as well as comfort. Learn whether you should wear a long vamp shoe or a short vamp shoe. Choose a model with strong arch support and don't let style or color influence your purchase. Just any shoe which is pretty, is the wrong philosophy—in fact that is flirting with ruined health.

For general wear, I advocate a heel no higher than one and three-quarters inches. The pretties, with heels three inches or more, should be kept for times when you are not depending upon your feet to get you there! Or for dancing.

Ignorance of foot care is another offender to foot beauty. Regular treatments by a registered pediatrist, or a chiropodist, are strongly commended if you have the means, otherwise you must learn to exercise your feet at home, daily, and give them a pedicure at least once a week. Walk around bare footed or sandal shod, as frequently as possible, and whenever you can (without drawing attention) sit with your feet resting higher than your body. Up on a table or the back of a chair.

HINT-OF-THE-DAY

Importance of Sleep

There's much wisdom in the advice of Kitty Carlisle, lovely singing star of the stage and screen: "Enough sleep and not too much alcohol—and you can keep your face looking 18 right up to the day you are 35."

By way of taking her own medicine, Miss Carlisle averages nine hours sleep a night. She is equally religious in her exercise and has developed her own method for specific exercises.

"When I do an exercise that makes me sore, then I know I've hit the right muscles for that spot," she explains.

One of Miss Carlisle's favorite exercises is designed to benefit the arms and shoulders. You place one clenched fist in the palm of the other hand and then hold the hands at chest level, elbows out at either side. Push against resistance and force the hands first to one side, then to the other.

As for keeping the waistline slim and the tummy flat, here's the exercise recommended by this star:

Lie on the back on the floor with hands braced at either side, and flop both feet back over the head. Keep the knees straight, legs together, and slowly lower the feet back over the head until the toes are on the floor. The trick is to lower the legs very slowly, and if you can do that you are not so rusty on exercise after all. Return to the original position and repeat the exercise three times.

PETER SEES CHRIST'S GLORY

LESSON TEXT—Matthew 17:1-9, 14-18.
GOLDEN TEXT—We beheld his glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father. —John 1.14.

Service in the name of Christ can be nothing but an empty formality, and a disappointing experience of one's inability really to help anyone, unless it is backed by a vision of the Saviour in all His glory. To Peter, whose life we are studying, there came such an experience as he went with the Lord to the Mount of Transfiguration. We cannot duplicate that day of days in his life in any physical sense, but we may, yes we must, withdraw to that quiet place where we may spiritually see Him whose we are and whom we serve as our transcendent Lord.

I. A Vision of Glory (vv. 1-9).

1. A mountain-top experience (vv. 1-3).

Too much of the daily life and walk of Christians is in the valley. We need now and then to come up to the high places where we may be spiritually renewed. Jesus is ready to take us as He did the three disciples, "up into a high mountain apart." We may not be able to move our bodies, but our spirits may soar to sublime heights with Him. There He will reveal Himself in all His glory.

2. A mistaken attitude (v. 4).

Whether Peter was confused by the remarkable experience, or if it was but another expression of his unfortunate tendency to talk when he should be quiet, we do not know. But he is a representative of those who miss the supreme blessing of such a priceless moment by trying to tell God what should be done.

Had Peter's suggestion been accepted by our Lord there would never have been any redemption for the human race. Sin and sorrow would have reigned supreme in the earth, while he and his brethren enjoyed a season of fellowship with Moses and Elias and their Lord.

3. A divine testimony (vv. 5-7).

God spoke and scattered the confusion of men's thinking by declaring the deity of Jesus, "This is my beloved Son," and His supremacy, "Hear ye him." We live in days of theological and philosophical confusion. We struggle in vain to resolve the moral chaos which has resulted from erroneous teaching by any arguments or by the devices of men. Let us appeal to the Word of God. It is plain, powerful, "sharper than a two-edged sword."

4. A glorious result (vv. 8, 9).

"They saw no man save Jesus only."

II. A Call to Service (vv. 14-18).

Service should never precede vision. Vision is given as a preparation for service.

1. A needy soul (vv. 14, 15).

We live in a world of such desperate need that even the confirmed "all's well with the world" optimists are beginning to see that their rose-colored glasses cannot make them oblivious to its sin and sorrow. The boy was sick; his father was in despair; and these two things just about sum up the need of most of humanity.

2. Impotent Christian workers (vv. 16, 17).

The man brought his son to the place where he had a right to expect help—to the followers of Christ. But he found them without faith to help him. Little wonder then that those around them were still in perverse unbelief. We who profess to follow Christ, and especially those of us who say that we are His servants, should be ashamed of our impotent gestures toward our needy fellow men. There is power with God, power in prayer, power in devoted and faithful service to Christ. Let us claim it!

3. The omnipotent Saviour (v. 18).

Jesus spoke, and the demon departed. The absolute supremacy of our Lord appears not only on the mount of glory, but shines even more brightly in the valley of need. Words do not suffice to describe Him, and yet we must by both word and life proclaim Him to the world as its living Lord and Saviour.

4. A glorious result (v. 18).

"The child was cured from that very hour."

Here is no partial solution, no "hope to help you" effort to meet man's need. Jesus met the boy's full need and at that very hour. Just so we may tell the sinner that he may come to the Saviour with the full assurance that his sin will be put away, and that by faith he will become a child of God.

Seventy Years' Capacity

Therefore thus saith the Lord of hosts: Because ye have not heard my words, behold, I will send and take all the families of the North, saith the Lord, and Nebuchadnezzar the king of Babylon, my servant, and will bring them against this land . . . Moreover, I will take from them the voice of mirth, and the voice of gladness . . . and these nations shall serve the king of Babylon seventy years.—Jeremiah 25: 8-11.

WHAT to EAT and WHY

C. Houston Goudiss Discusses the Diet of Expectant Mother. Some General Rules for Wise Eating at This Important Time

By C. HOUSTON GOUDISS

DISTINGUISHED writers and sociologists, both here and abroad, have concerned themselves in recent years with the writing of a Children's Charter and a Baby's Bill of Rights. These efforts are commendable because they demonstrate a forward-looking attitude . . . a genuine attempt to better the lot of the next generation. Indeed, they represent a concerted effort to do for children in general what mothers have always tried to do individually for their own children.

Before a Baby Is Born

But not every mother realizes what all nutritionists know—that to a not inconsiderable degree, the very foundations of good health for the child are laid down before he is born. For it has been well said that good nutrition for the infant begins with good nutrition for the mother.

Unfortunately, many people, even in this enlightened age, still cling to superstition and old wives' tales when it comes to choosing the proper foods for those important months before a baby is born.

Some Common Fallacies

As a result, some expectant mothers overeat, frequently of the wrong kinds of food; others do not take enough of the foods that are required to maintain top health for the mother and build the baby's body soundly; while still another group believes such antiquated notions as the idea that a woman may eat whatever she "craves" during this period.

In view of the fact that recent nutrition work has given us more knowledge than ever before of how and what the expectant mother should eat, dietetic errors during this period are particularly deplorable.

Building Better Babies

Every expectant mother should be under the care of a physician, and usually he gives specific advice concerning the foods that may be eaten and those that might better be avoided. But every woman will be a better mother if she understands something of the functions and fate of foods, with particular reference to this period.

Don't Overeat

Generally speaking, the same foods that are required for a well-balanced diet under ordinary circumstances are the ones that will best serve the needs of mother and child during the months before a baby is born. There are, however, certain modifications of the diet that may well be taken into consideration.

First, a word about the amount of food consumed: It is not necessary to eat more than is required to satisfy the normal appetite, in the belief that large quantities of additional food are needed. Nutritionists have demonstrated that the energy requirements of the expectant mother increase only during the last three months of gestation. Thus, it is not necessary to increase the caloric intake for the first few months, though toward the end of the period a gradual increase in caloric intake may be made under the direction of the physician. It is advisable, however, to emphasize that the character of the additional food consumed, as well as the amount, should always be taken into consideration.

Building Materials

It is important to pay special attention to the amount and kind of protein that is eaten, since over the entire period the baby grows tremendously, even though almost half of the weight of the new-born child is added during the final two months before birth.

Recent investigations also indicate that the prospective mother is best able to maintain her nutritional reserve if the amount of protein in her diet is carefully calculated. It is desirable likewise that the protein be of the highest quality.

Milk is even more important in the diet of the expectant mother than in that of other adults—not only for its protein, but because of its minerals and vitamins. As a rule, the expectant mother should take a quart of milk a day, whereas the usual diet for adults calls for a pint of milk daily.

Minerals and Vitamins

In addition to requiring protein to help build tissue for her baby, the expectant mother must have a generous amount of minerals. Calcium and phosphorus are required especially for the formation of the baby's bones and teeth. Construction begins on all the teeth before birth, and at birth, all 20 of the first set are completely calcified within the jaw.

Besides providing the necessary minerals to help construct bones and teeth, it is also important to include in the prospective mother's diet an adequate supply of vitamins. Vitamin D is essential if the calcium and phosphorus are to be utilized properly, and it has also been indicated that vitamins A and C are likewise most important at this time.

The mineral iron is also required in significant amounts and this may well be obtained from eggs, dried fruits, whole grain cereals and green leafy vegetables. It has been found that the thyroid gland is unusually active in the expectant mother. And in those sections of the country where the drinking water and soil are deficient in iodine, physicians frequently recommend the use of some food such as iodized salt.

Adequate Bulk or Cellulose

It is most desirable that enough bulky foods be included in the diet to help maintain regular health habits.

This requirement should be taken care of automatically if generous amounts of fruits, vegetables and whole grain cereals are consumed. For in addition to their minerals and vitamins, all these foods likewise supply bulk which aids in promoting regularity.

The wide use of fruits and vegetables will also help to build up a liberal alkaline reserve, which helps to safeguard health during the period of gestation.

If all these factors are taken into consideration, the expectant mother will not only help to preserve her own health, but will take constructive measures to give her baby the blessings of a sound start in life. Then as the healthy, contented infant grows into the healthy, happy, active toddler, and later becomes the healthy, well-adjusted school boy, the mother can indeed be proud of her handiwork!

Questions Answered

Mrs. S. D. L.—It is true that nuts furnish protein similar in quantity to that found in cream and top milk. Nutritionists do not agree, however, that the protein is the complete equal of milk protein in quality.

Miss E. D. M.—Yes, in most of the foods containing vitamin G, this vitamin is associated with vitamin B. White of egg is the only food in which it is definitely known to date that vitamin G occurs without vitamin B.

Indoor and Outdoor Ideas

ONE of these designs gives you four gay little extras to freshen up your dark dresses and suits—an accessory set comprising a fitted jacket, a soft, roomy bag, a tailored ascot scarf and a pair of those new boxy-figured gloves. The other is a practical house dress, so comfortable and so good-looking that you'll want it for shopping and runabout as well as for home work. Make the frivolous accessory set—make the useful house dress! Both are easy, and you'll enjoy them both!

Four Matching Accessories.

It will make your clothes seem like lots more, if you vary them with bright accessories in just the colors you want. Don't be afraid to tackle the gloves. They're easy, with the detailed sew chart included in your pattern and so smart! Lots of women who haven't sewed any more than you have are making their own, with this design. Choose flannel, jersey, or suede.

Slenderizing House Dress.

This is such a trim, tailored style, with darts at the waistline for slimness, and a gathered bodice to give fullness over the bust. The skirt has an action pleat for greater comfort. The plain V neckline, finished with edging, is very becoming. ### VAGABONDS BOW TO DIAMOND BREAD FIVE

Reserves Take Thriller From Mexicala Team Of Mason City

Going under in the face of superior power, the Klemme Vagabonds lost their second game in 12 starts, Monday night. Playing the strong Diamond Bread quintet the Vagabonds held them to a nine all score at the end of the first quarter, and then failed to score in the second period while the Bakers rung up nine more, to make the half time score 18 to 9. In the second half the locals weakened badly and the opposition had little difficulty in finishing out in front 41 to 20.

A. Keeper led the Vagabonds with 11 points, while Usher and Ransom with 13 and 12 respectively, led the Mason City team.

Reserves Take Thriller

The Vagabond reserves had to come from behind to take a 28 to 27 thriller from the Mexicala team of Mason City. Playing on even terms all through the game, the Mason City five forged ahead in the last quarter and with two minutes to play held a 27 to 22 lead. However, R. Keeper poked in two field goals and Hartzell one to gain the necessary one-point margin needed for victory.

Blanchet with 8 points led the attack for the locals, while Espinosa led the Mexicala five with 9.

Mullins Hybrids, Monday

Next Monday night, January 23, the Vagabonds will play a double header with the Mullins Hybrids of Corwith, on the local floor The Corwith team has a good record, and they are good. The Vagabonds have been doing alright, too. The first game is called for 7:45.

CARCASS BASIS SALE IN CANADA IS INCREASING

Canada farmers sold 40 per cent of their hogs on a carcass basis in 1938—the biggest increase in the spreading popularity of that system since it was introduced only four years ago, reports Geoffrey Shepherd, Iowa State College agricultural economist.

In 1937, 26 per cent of the hogs were sold on a graded basis, in 1936, 13 per cent, and in 1935—the first year after the plan was inaugurated—4 per cent.

Get Paid For Meat

Farmers in Canada used to sell all their hogs on a live weight basis, as is done in the United States, but now only a little more than half of them are marketed "on the hoof."

Farmers selling hogs on a carcass basis are paid on the basis of the grade and weight of the hog after it has been butchered In that way they get paid exactly what the hog is worth as marketable meat.

Graded By Government Men

Carcasses are weighed individually by electrical weighing machines and are graded by government inspectors The basic grade is "No 2." A premium of $1 a head is paid on No. 1's and a deduction of about $1 is made on No 3's

Since each farmer's hogs are butchered, weighed, graded and paid for separately, it is possible to trace the origin of soft carcasses, cause of bruising injuries, presence of disease and value of certain breeding stock.

Klemme Shamrocks Now Lead In Conference Race

WIN OVER WODEN PUTS KLEMME SHAMROCKS IN CONFERENCE LEAD

By defeating Woden 29 to 28 on the local court Friday night the Klemme Shamrocks stepped into first place in the Seven Eagles Conference. Klemme and Woden have each lost one game, but the Shamrocks are in the lead as Woden is short one game, as is Hayfield

If the Shamrocks can win the balance of the games on their schedule, and Woden also finishes with a perfect record, then the Shamrocks and Woden will end in a tie

Other games in the conference race saw Crystal Lake defeat Kanawha 35 to 28, and Hayfield nosed out Goodell in a thriller that ended 37 to 36, and which kept Goodell in the cellar position.

Following is the Seven Conference standing to date:

| | W | L | Pct. |
|---|---|---|---|
| Klemme | 5 | 1 | 833 |
| Woden | 4 | 1 | 800 |
| Kanawha | 3 | 3 | .500 |
| Crystal Lake | 3 | 3 | .500 |
| Hayfield | 2 | 3 | .400 |
| Goodell | 0 | 6 | 000 |

KLEMME SHAMROCKS DEFEAT WODEN IN THRILLER HERE FRIDAY EVENING

It was a big night Friday the 13th. for the Klemme Shamrocks when they defeated Woden high school in a double header basketball game

The Little Shamrocks started the fireworks by banging in baskets right and left that set them in front 16 to 2 at the end of the first quarter The half way mark saw 26 Shamrock counters against 8 for the visitors The third quarter the Shamrocks were out in front 30 to 13 and the final score ended 39 to 15 for the Little Shamrocks.

Eleven Shamrocks saw service with Zabilka and Brinkman each good for 11 points, L. Stille 10, Wicks 5 and Schoenwetter 2. M Korte and Buns led the Woden attack with 5 points each

Woden Draws First Blood

In a game that was generally conceded to be all Woden, the feature game opened with Woden stepping right into the lead with an 8 to 3 count at the end of the first quarter That ended Woden's lead for the evening, as the Shamrocks came back strong in the second quarter and ran the score up to take a 16 to 13 lead at the half

The Shamrocks stretched their lead to 27 to 22 at the end of the third quarter and then proceeded to go to sleep as Woden clipped in 6 points in quick succession while the Shamrocks had a hard time ringing up two counters and the visitors were up to 28 points with the Shamrocks holding a slim one-point lead with a couple of minutes to go. A chance to add to more points via the free throw lane was muffed by the Shamrocks, while Woden missed a free chance for a tie, and the game ended, Klemme 29, Woden 28.

The Shamrocks battled without the services of Barz, sharpshooter, but lanky Wayne Buseman, who took his place, played a fine game, getting plenty of balls off the board and shooting passes to Grosshuesch who cashed in with 15 points Kluckhohn held down Goslin, Woden's ace basket shooter to two lone field goals. Helm for Woden was good for 12 points. For the Shamrocks, Grange and Kluckhohn each contributed 5, Katter 2 and Buseman 2. For Woden, Helm led with 12, Goslin 7, Gerdes and Gibson 4 each and Anderson 1.

Wang Ching-wei's Declaration Forces China to Air Troubles

By Joseph W. La Bine

EDITOR'S NOTE—When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of the news analyst, and not necessarily of the newspaper.

Asia

War-torn China's biggest boast is her constantly growing national unity, a product of necessity that has made Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek the strongest Chinese ruler in modern history. But despite this well-publicized unity, China has not been able to make much of a showing against her Japanese invaders. Indeed, foreign military observers find Tokyo's paper-thin front lines so vulnerable that they say 30,000 American, British or French troops could put the enemy to rout. But in Jap-occupied territory are 270,000,600 civilians and 1,250,000 armed guerrillas whose spirit of national unity is still not strong enough to inspire a sudden, inevitably successful attack.

GENERALISSIMO CHIANG

Better than the national unity argument is the theory that smart General Chiang has been staging a fake show of Chinese nationalism, offering a good front at the expense of his wavering government. Though Chungking headquarters are overrun with nepotism, corruption and inefficiency, many abuses have been tolerated to make the outside world think China is strong. In the end General Chiang wangled handsome loans and credit arrangements from both the U. S. and Britain, proving the stunt was working, at least temporarily.

Not anticipated, however, was the walkout of one-time Premier Wang Ching-wei, who celebrated New Year's by reaching peace terms with Japanese Premier Fuminaro Konoye. Long a silent bulwark of China's Kuomintang (Nationalist) party, Mr. Wang reportedly met at Hongkong with Japanese agents and reached terms which would make him China's head man, leaving General Chiang out in the cold. Terms: (1) China should open diplomatic relations with Japanese puppet state, Manchukuo; (2) China should agree to economic "cooperation" with Japan; (3) China should adhere to the Jap-Italo-German anti-Communist agreement; (4) China should accept Japanese garrisons while the anti-Communist pact was in force.

Interpretations of the Wang demarche have come thick and fast. In Tokyo, happy Japanese thought it meant a breakdown of the Kuomintang and the spotlight of publicity on China's internal troubles. With Chiang weakened, Japanese puppet states would no longer seem pointless. In Shanghai, still Chinese despite its Japanese ownership, observers thought the Wang declaration was a well-timed Jap move to counteract U. S. and British credits to General Chiang. Whatever the cause, it was a happy day for Tokyo because China has been showing hardened resistance the past few weeks.

With the die cast, General Chiang no longer saw need for hiding his troubles. From Chungking came word of a wholesale purge from the Kuomintang of some 200 peace partisans. Expelled was Deserter Wang, charged with having attempted to gain support from military leaders in Szechuan and Yunnan provinces.

Politics

When Purge failed, when President Roosevelt's favoritism for Left-Wingers Corcoran, Hopkins, Jackson and Oliphant began bothering conservative New Dealers, forecasters saw a coming split in the Democratic party. Veering away from the White House were Vice President Garner, National Chairman Farley and Secretary of State Hull, any of whom might be a conservative 1940 presidential candidate. With two cabinet vacancies to fill, President Roosevelt had a chance to widen this breach by naming left wingers.

What forecasters overlooked was the always-present possibility of concession, both by Garner, Farley, Hull, et al, and the White House. Result: President Roosevelt has named Harry Hopkins to the commerce secretaryship and former Gov. Frank Murphy of Michigan to the attorney generalship, at the same time retaining party leadership.

Roosevelt strategy: Until just before congress opened, the White House reserved comment on what every legislator knew was a certainty, namely, drastic revision of such New Deal brainchildren as social security, the Wagner act, relief administration and neutrality legislation. The President also knew such revision was a certainty, but the trump card was held back. Then, with the Hopkins and Murphy appointments apparently due for congressional opposition, the White House was able to soothe ruffled nerves by promising he would do no more bill drafting. Consequently both appointments are being approved, though Hopkins must appear before a committee investigating relief irregularities, and Murphy before the senate judiciary committee to explain his attitude toward sit-down strikes.

What cannot be avoided, however, is the feeling that White House concessions outweigh those of Mr. Garner and other rebels. Having committed himself to a political back seat while congress is in session, Mr. Roosevelt must find some way to recapture the driver's seat or risk political oblivion by convention time next year.

Defense

During the World war German "U" boats made naval history by approaching U. S. Atlantic coast cities. Last September German submarines were still a menace, helping to force blockade-wary Britishers into the embarrassing peace of Munich. In January, German submarines again made headlines because Berlin announces her determination to equal Great Britain's strength in submarine tonnage.

Under the Anglo-German naval pact of 1935, Germany has this right under emergency, but London fails to understand what emergency faces the Reich today. Now built, under construction or appropriated for are 71 German submarines; smaller than average, their tonnage is only 31,282. Britain, with 73 submarines weighing 75,904 tons, finds many of her heavy underwater craft obsolete. Not only is London frightened by Germany's numerical superiority if the Reich builds up to parity, but also because Germany intends to build several large ocean-going submarines of 1,000 tons or more.

This program has tremendous significance on the international picture. It can only stimulate the world arms race, since England must now build more ships capable of convoying her ocean steamers. In France, where the Anglo-German naval agreement has always been unpopular (because, claims Paris, London should never have recognized Germany's right to any naval strength), the Reich's new submarine parity has produced genuine alarm. Italy, always a big "U" boat builder, reflects that the combined German - Italian submarine fleets can now patrol the seven seas.

Convinced that a new diplomatic onslaught is behind Germany's move, certain British circles are capitalizing on their troubles to win U. S. military support. Their story: That Germany's 1,000 ton submarines are being built to cross the Atlantic, in retaliation for the cool reception Hitler tactics have been receiving in official Washington. If this danger—real or false—can be impressed on U. S. congressmen, Great Britain hopes it will result in a larger American navy.

Science

Outstanding among 1938's news stories was the growth and flourish of dictators. To casual investigators, this is a new and revolutionary phenomenon, but historians recall that regimentation is centuries old. By year's end, dictators had been placed on the defensive at least in the minds of democratic nationals in the U. S., Britain and France. And although 1939 may see more growth, more flourish, science has stepped in with a prediction.

The man: Dr. John R. Swanton of Washington's Smithsonian institution.

The forecast: "In spite of the efforts of political, social or clerical groups to coerce the spirit of man, man has always been able to resist and reassert his freedom . . . Christianity, the great revolution of the Eighteenth century and the growth of science have been man's answer to all attempts to dominate him."

Miscellany

For the first time in its history, New York's Sing Sing prison has executions every week during January. Total for the month already scheduled: 10.

● U. S. correspondents returning from eighth Pan-American conference at Lima, Peru, have reported censorship, intimidation and spying unlike that ever before seen at a Pan-American assembly.

● Army participation in the U. S. navy's three-month Atlantic fleet maneuvers has been cancelled because of friction, army officials claiming the exercise offers little value for its officers and men.

Religion

From its inspiration in Nazi Germany, European persecution of Jews is spreading to new fronts. The latest:

Czechoslovakia. German-patterned ghetto laws will soon go into effect. Jews will be eliminated from politics, civil service, teaching, journalism and radio. A few will be allowed to continue practicing law and medicine.

Danzig. Though allowed to take their wealth with them (in contrast to German methods), Danzig Jews are fleeing in anticipation of the Free City's union with the Reich.

Liechtenstein. Containing 65 square miles, populated by 10,000 people of Germanic origin, this principality is ousting all Jews who arrived after the World war.

Transportation

Last winter's congress tagged the railroad issue "too hot to handle" and adjourned in the face of a labor crisis. Since then the crisis has been smoothed, but only on the promise to both railroads and their employees that the new congress will give better co-operation. First step in the right direction was the report of a six-man management-labor committee which asked: (1) regulation of all transportation by the interstate commerce commission; (2) creation of an independent transportation board to handle all other regulations; (3) creation of a federal transportation court; (4) repeal of the controversial long-and-short-haul clause.

As congress rolls up its sleeves once more, as observers discover the only unanimity lies in undesirability of government-owned railroads, four men make rail news either by speaking or by keeping quiet:

President Roosevelt. The administration's much-advertised 1939 legislative motto is "Let Congress Do It," which means that less White House pressure is being exerted on law makers. Though the President appointed the management-labor committee, though its report was made to him, he apparently believes broad recommendations are enough. Details of U. S. transportation reorganization are being left for joint senate-house ironing.

Sen. Burton K. Wheeler. Chairman of the senate's interstate commerce committee, Montana's Wheeler is the individualist who fought President Roosevelt's court reform bill. Definitely a nonconformist, Mr. Wheeler has promised to co-operate with the White House but he calls the management-labor report merely a "working basis." Planks in the Wheeler rail program: (1) no repeal of the long-and-short-haul clause (which prevents roads from charging a lower rate for a long haul than for a short haul over the same route, in the same direction); (2) financial cleanup of railroads, even though it necessitates drastic measures to scale down top-heavy structures; (3) no government loans to railroads at 2 per cent unless similar concession is made to other industries.

Rep. Clarence F. Lea. Far-sighted and willing to listen, California's Lea—as chairman of the house interstate commerce committee—is introducing broadly drafted railroad relief legislation on the stipulations that it must not be rushed, that it shall be reworked after lengthy committee hearings. The Lea idea: That competing transportation media provide a far more basic problem than the railroad issue alone.

JOHN A. HASTINGS

John A. Hastings. Not seriously considered, but signifying how far afield railroad relief proposals can go, is the "plan for postalized transportation" evolved by former New York State Senator Hastings, and introduced last congress by North Dakota's Rep. William Lemke. The Hastings idea: "Application to passenger and freight services of the rate principle successfully sought and profitably employed for a hundred years in first class mail carriage . . ." The U. S. would be divided into nine railroad regions with five types of passenger service. From New York to San Francisco by coach would cost $5. Sample fares by class from Manhattan to Chicago: coach, $1; parlor car, $3; local sleeper, $5; express reserved, $10; de luxe limited, $15. Not entirely unsympathetic with the Hastings plan, Senator Wheeler surprised debunkers of postalization by asking the interstate commerce commission for an opinion on its feasability.

WHAT to EAT and WH

C. Houston Goudiss Suggests the Part Played by Diet In Helping to Prevent the Common Cold

By C. HOUSTON GOUDISS

STATISTICS compiled over a period of years indicate that during the months of January and February, the number of colds and other respiratory infections continually mounts. Usually a peak is reached in late February or early March.

It is during the next eight or ten weeks, therefore, that, in the light of past experience, more adults will lose time from their work and more children will be absent from school, as a result of colds, than at any other period during the year.

The Tremendous Cost of Colds

It has been estimated that colds cost the United States more than a billion dollars a year. That figure, of course, is only an estimate. It merely attempts to gauge the dollars and cents lost in wages; and in the money spent in an effort to overcome colds. It does not take into account the discomforts that may be caused by this common complaint. Nor does it allow for the possible after-effects of a neglected cold.

Cause and Cure Obscure

No scientists today are willing to state what causes colds or how they may be cured. Large numbers of clinical and laboratory tests have been performed throughout the world in an effort to discover why we catch cold. Numerous records have been made concerning colds in men, women and children, as scientific workers have patiently and persistently tried to investigate the cause of colds. They have sought even one clue that might help us to outwit this common enemy!

Various theories have been advanced. Many have been discarded, and others have been considered sufficiently plausible to investigate further. There is one point on which many authorities agree: that is a belief that a cold is caused by a germ so small that it cannot be seen by the most powerful microscope.

It has been suggested by a number of competent observers that whenever the weather becomes damp and raw, and wherever crowds of people gather together, the cold germ may find victims among those whose resistance is low.

Prevention Rather Than Cure

Though we may not know precisely what causes a cold, nor how to cure it once we have been stricken, we can and should help to build up bodily resistance, so that we develop strong reserves against the unknown cold germ and any others lurking about.

Inasmuch as a program for building up bodily resistance is one which encourages greater health and longevity, it is a program which all forward-looking homemakers should put into effect for their families.

Helping to Build Resistance

Such a program should include proper food, normal elimination, adequate exercise and sufficient rest and sleep so as to avoid fatigue. Just as food plays an important part in helping to promote growth, maintain health and increase the chances for longevity, so does it have a stellar role in the battle to prevent colds.

The Right Food a Strong Weapon

The well balanced diet, as I have previously stated, is one that is built, first of all, upon a firm foundation of the protective foods —milk, eggs, fresh fruits and vegetables. These are the foods that are richest in minerals and vitamins—substances which help to regulate body processes and help to guard against deficiency diseases.

There should be adequate protein to allow for the demands of growth and to help repair worn-out body tissue. There should be enough bulk or cellulose to help promote normal elimination. And there should be a sufficient amount of water and other fluids; for water flushes the countless channels of physical existence, as it passes from the body through the lungs and skin, as well as through the kidneys and the large intestine.

Significance of Vitamin A

Nutrition authorities are frequently asked, "Is there any specific food substance that may be said to be particularly helpful in preventing colds?" or "Is it true that vitamin A is especially valuable in combatting colds?"

Here is one answer to both questions: scientists have found evidence that vitamin A, which occurs most abundantly in milk and other dairy products, and in green, leafy and yellow vegetables, helps to keep the epithelial cells of the mucous membranes in good condition, so that the natural defenses are preserved.

One of our outstanding nutrition authorities has gone on record as saying that in his opinion, at least four times the amount of vitamin A required for apparent health may bring a good return in health protection.

It is important to remember, however, that the best su piece of advice that can be g regarding diet is to eat moder ly of well balanced meals.

Don't Overeat

In addition to partaking a quately of the protective fo those who are endeavoring to a program of living that will to prevent the common cold sho likewise guard against overeati

One should also do everyth possible to avoid coming in dir contact with persons who h colds.

Through a routine of correct ing and sound habits of hygie the homemaker can go a long w toward helping her family to p vent colds. Remember that he especially, an ounce of preventi is worth perhaps more than pound of cure!

Pershing Touched by Thought of Fellowship

Visiting the base hospital at Tours during the war, General Pershing came upon a fine-looking soldier sitting up in bed, and asked him where he was wounded, meaning to inquire as to the nature of his wounds. He replied:

"Do you remember, sir, just where the road skirts a small grove and turns to the left across a wheatfield and then leads up over a hill? Well, there, sir."

"He was clearly describing the advance south of Soissons," said General Pershing. "Of course, I was not there at the time but it touched me that he should feel that I must have been very close to him."

First Written Constitution Was Framed in America 300 Years Ago

On January 14, 1639, Representatives from Three Connecticut Towns Assembled at Hartford And There Adopted the "Fundamental Orders" That Provided a Model for the Federal Constitution Under Which the United States Is Now Governed.

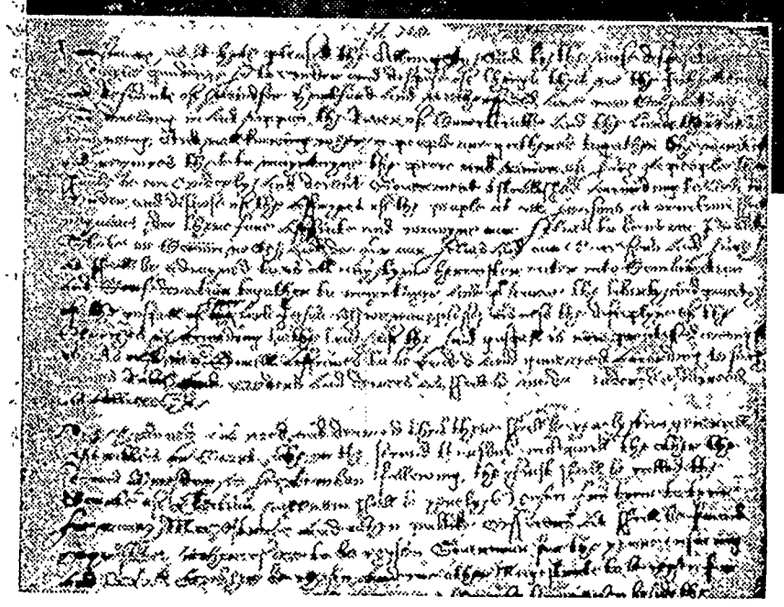
By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

© Western Newspaper Union.



Preamble of the "Fundamental Orders of Connecticut."

Adoption of the "Fundamental Orders of Connecticut, January 14, 1639"—(From the mural painting by Albert Herter in the Connecticut Supreme court, Hartford). The figure seated at the desk is supposed to be Roger Ludlow; the speaker, facing forward, is Reverend Thomas Hooker; and the one standing, facing Hooker and holding his hat, is John Haynes, who was chosen first governor of Connecticut under the "Orders."

THREE hundred years ago this month a little group of English colonists in America gathered together and adopted, for the first time in the history of the world, a written constitution, springing from the people and creating a government for them. It contained no reference to a "dread sovereign" or a "beloved king"—it quietly assumed that the people had a right to rule themselves.

It provided for a legislative assembly, called the General Court, whose members were elected by the people, while the executive and judicial functions of the government were exercised by a governor and six magistrates, or assistants, also forming part of the General Court and elected by the people. Such was the "Fundamental Orders of Connecticut," adopted at Hartford on January 14, 1639.

Under it, according to one historian, "Connecticut was as absolutely a state in 1639 as it was in 1776," and it formed the basis for the charter of 1662 which remained in force until 1818. But more important than that is the fact that it served as the basis for the federal Constitution which the new nation, the United States of America, would adopt 140-odd years later.

For, as another historian points out, "it will be noticed that this original Constitution of Connecticut had certain similarities to the present Constitution of the United States, inasmuch as the individuality of the town was recognized on the one hand and the main body of the people on the other, in our national system both the states and the whole people are represented. It is an interesting fact that in the federal convention of 1787 the compromise in accordance with which our national arrangement was agreed upon was called the 'Connecticut compromise.'"

First Settlement.

For an understanding of this historic document, it is necessary to go back a few years in New England history. In 1630 the Plymouth company had granted the Connecticut country to the Earl of Warwick, who turned it over to Lord Say and Sele, Lord Brooke and others.

In 1635 John Winthrop, son of the Massachusetts governor, acting for the proprietors of Connecticut, established a colony near the mouth of the Connecticut river and named it Saybrook in their honor. A few years later another settlement was founded at New Haven. Meanwhile, however, emigrants from the older towns of Massachusetts Bay colony began swarming into the Connecticut part of what is now Connecticut.

This migration was mainly due to their dissatisfaction with the hard rule of the united church and state in Massachusetts. One man, particularly, who dissented from this rule was Rev. Thomas Hooker. "Herein of ye fame of Conightecute River, they had a hankering mind after it" says a contemporary chronicler. So in 1636 Hooker and a congregation of more than 100 set forth for the Connecticut valley, arrived at the site of Hartford and there made their settlement.

Within a year the new colony of Connecticut had more than 800 people gathered in the three towns of Windsor, Hartford and Wethersfield. Although nominally under the control of Massachusetts, it soon became evident that the people of Connecticut had "a hankering mind" after a government of their own.

Trained for Law.

One of the colonists of Windsor was a lawyer named Roger Ludlow, born in Wiltshire in 1590, educated at Balliol college, Oxford, and admitted to the Inner Temple in London in 1612. Having become a stockholder in the Massachusetts Bay company in 1630, he was appointed an assistant to Gov. John Winthrop. In March of that year he sailed for New England.

Ludlow took a leading part in founding Dorchester where he held several offices such as land commissioner and justice of the peace. In 1634 he was elected deputy governor and disappointed at not being chosen governor, he resolved to leave the colony and go to Connecticut. As one of the prominent settlers of Windsor he was placed at the head of a commission to make laws for the "well-ordering" of that town. In March, 1636, when Hartford, Windsor and Wethersfield were set apart as a colony he was made head of the provisional government to serve for a year.

He presided at the first court of magistrates which convened in Hartford in March, 1636, and in the same year was elected deputy governor and was re-elected several times. Upon the reorganization of the government in May, 1637, he was chosen a magistrate and in 1638 was regularly elected as governor.

By the beginning of 1639, it was generally recognized that Connecticut was definitely out from under the control of Massachusetts and "on her own." So the colonists began thinking of organizing a more permanent form of government. The result was the drafting of the "Fundamental Orders" which was adopted at the historic meeting in Hartford on January 14 of that year.

"It has been customary to ascribe the general character and content of the Orders to Reverend Thomas Hooker of Hartford who preached before the General Court on May 31, 1638, a memorable sermon on the text, Deuteronomy 1:13, which is presumed to have presaged the Orders," says George M. Dutcher in the introduction to a pamphlet on "The Fundamental Orders of Connecticut," published for the Connecticut Tercentenary commission by the Yale University Press in 1934, "The legal phrasing of the Orders on the other hand indicates the work of one trained not in divinity but in law. So far as is known the one individual at that time resident in the three Connecticut river towns who possessed such training was Roger Ludlow of Windsor, to whom it may be presumed that the actual authorship of the Orders should be credited. To what extent Hooker and Ludlow may have conferred and co-operated, and what contribution if any was made from other sources can only be pure surmise."

Since the settlers of Connecticut called upon Roger Ludlow to write their constitution for them, it would have been only just that they should have elected him the first governor to rule the colony under it. But they didn't. They passed him by and elected John Haynes, Ludlow's "evil genius," to use his own words.

Disappointed Again.

Bitterly disappointed over this, Ludlow, accompanied by several of his friends and their families, moved to Unquon which was renamed Fairfield. Then, as a crowning indignity, he was forced to apologize to the assembly for "undue haste" in taking up lands there.

In 1646 the assembly requested him to frame a body of laws for Connecticut and, by adding 14 articles from the Massachusetts "Body of Liberties" to 63 that were new, he produced what is still known as "Ludlow's Code" and what has given him the title of "Father of Connecticut Jurisprudence." In 1648, 1651 and 1653 Ludlow was a commissioner to the congress or council of the United Colonies and held various other offices of responsibility and trust.

However, his impetuous nature repeatedly led him into trouble with the authorities and finally, declaring that he would no longer live in Connecticut, he sold out his interests and sailed with his family to visit his brother in Virginia. A short time later he removed to Ireland where Oliver Cromwell entrusted to him the administration of justice and the determining of claims to forfeited lands in the county of Cork. His career came to an end sometime before 1668—the exact date of his death being unknown.

Although the phrasing of the "Orders" indicates that it was the work of a man trained in the law, as Roger Ludlow was, the preamble was probably the work of Reverend Thomas Hooker. It said:

"Forasmuch as it hath pleased the Allmighty God by the wise disposition of his divine providence so to Order and dispose of things that we the Inhabitants and Residents of Windsor, Hartford and Wethersfield are now Cohabiting and dwelling in and uppon the River of Conecttecotte and the Lands thereunto adjoining, And well knowing where a people are gathered togather the word of god requires that to mayntayne the peace and Union of such a people there should be an Orderly and decent Government established according to God to Order and dispose of the affayres of the people at all seasons as occasion shall require. Doe therefore associate and conjoine ourselves to be as one Publike State or Comon welth, and doe for ourselves and our Successors and such as shall be adjoined to us at any time hereafter enter into Combination and Confederation together to mayntayne and preserve the liberty and purity of the gospell of our lord Jesus which we now profess, as also the discipline of the Churches which according to the truth of the said gospell is now practiced amongst us, As also in our Civil affaires to be guided and governed according to such lawes Rules Orders and decrees as shall be made Ordered and decreed as followth:"

Not only was the world's first written constitution produced in Connecticut by a lawyer but the Nutmeg state also claims the distinction of having had the first law school in America. A few years ago a house on South street in Litchfield, Conn., and a little building adjacent to it were established as a permanent memorial to Judge Tapping Reeve, the founder of the school, and Judge James Gould, who later helped to conduct it.

Tapping Reeve, a graduate of the College of New Jersey (Princeton) in the class of 1763, settled in Litchfield in 1772, began the practice and teaching of law, and built a home. Judge Reeve conducted the law school not in his own home but in a small building which he had placed in his front yard, to the left of the entrance gate and the house itself. He used this building as his law office because, even before he formally established the school, so many students came to "read law" with him that it was more convenient to have a separate building. In 1784, when the law school was founded, it was this building that housed the first classes.

JOHN HAYNES
First governor of Connecticut under the "Orders."

In 1798 Mr. Reeve, then a judge, was joined by James Gould, a graduate of Yale in the class of 1791, and they conducted the school together until 1820, when Judge Reeve retired.

One of Judge Reeve's earliest pupils was his brother-in-law, Aaron Burr. John C. Calhoun was one of five future cabinet members who received their legal education at Litchfield. Many senators, "members of congress galore" and judges "by the dozen" also were trained there. In addition there were some who later made their reputations outside the law, among them the educator, Horace Mann.

The Litchfield law school is said to have played an important part in the interpretation of law in the young republic until the school passed out of existence, when the establishment of law schools in connection with the colleges made private institutions no longer necessary.

The original law school building has undergone many vicissitudes since it was first established as such in 1784. It continued to be used for classes until the school was closed in 1833. In 1846 it was moved bodily through the streets of Litchfield, from South street to West Hill, to be used as the resident of Henry Ward, a printer and poet.

Forty years later new owners made such large additions that the original structure became almost unrecognizable. In 1906, however, a descendant of a graduate of the school restored it to its original state, and, in 1911, it was taken over by the Litchfield Historical and Antiquarian society.

Women Must Utilize Their Natural Gifts

By PATRICIA LINDSAY

SOMEONE has said, "No beauties are born, all are made." And what hope and encouragement to all women lie in that statement!

True it is that few of us are born beautiful but persistency in making the most of what Nature endowed us with does make us attractive. And after all, it is the interesting-looking woman today, rather than the pretty-pretty, who is recognized and toasted as the modern beauty. The woman who has developed her natural gifts by being beauty-loving and beauty-seeking.

Gone are the days when one's earnest devotion to good looks was frowned upon, or when doctors voiced their disapproval of cosmetics. Today it is considered a woman's duty to society to be as lovely as possible and leading physicians believe strongly that the healthy, normal woman should keep astride of her times and make herself most attractive.

No matter what your age, your occupation, your circumstances, you owe it to yourself as a woman, and to those around you, to make the most of your feminine heritage Husbands and children alike unconsciously dote on wives and mothers who have not allowed themselves to become duds. Proud is the child who can produce a personable mother to show his friends and schoolmates.

—But Don't Be Extravagant!

But in seeking beauty, I do not advocate spending the rent or grocery money on expensive treatments or a flossy wardrobe. No indeed. If you can afford such luxuries well and good, but don't encourage frowns and wrinkles and a distorted mind by fretting over what you cannot have. You can exercise your body into a pleasing figure just as well in your own home as you can in a costly studio. Current newspapers and magazines offer sound advice on meticulous grooming and body care, so there is little excuse for you to moan because you have not the wherewithal for frequent visits to beauty salons.

Every woman's budget, however, should allow for occasional visits to a reliable physician to check her general health and diet, and also for a few good cosmetics—specific aids for ailing skin or hair and those necessary to preserve personal daintiness. To these, every woman has a right—they assist her mentally.

But just as pertinent as cosmetics to a woman's loveliness is the right approach to living. Gracious thoughts and characteristics, an active interest in something other than herself and her home, a desire to be an inspiration to society, rather than a burden. Such attainments certainly enhance the charm any woman creates by being pleasing to look at.

Keep Child's Mind Active

If you are truly concerned about her beauty you cannot fail to keep her mind active and growing What nonsense to allow her to concentrate on make-up! Teach her simple daily groomings. Fill her day with small duties and childish pleasures. Let her grow! Every child loves to be read to. Every child loves to paint and draw pictures. Think up new activities that will teach her to be self-reliant and progressive.

There is no beauty as appealing in all the world as a child's beauty It must be held sacred. It must not be scarred by stupid parents who feel that artificial beauty aids can possibly make their child more attractive!

Body health, skin health, mental health are the goals to be reached Help your child by concentrating on those She will grow to lovely womanhood, happy in the knowledge that her parents were wise parents who did not sacrifice her youth needlessly.

★ It's a Western Year
★ Sleeping Producers

By Virginia Vale

THIS begins to look more and more like a Western year, so far as the movies are concerned. Glorified Westerns these new ones will be, with the big studios offering you good casts, stories and sets, with A-1 directors handling the whole thing.

Walter Wanger will tempt you soon with "Stage Coach," starring Claire Trevor and John Wayne, Louise Platt, John Carradine, Donald Meek, George Bancroft, Thomas Mitchell and Andy Devine, with John Ford as director. The picture was shot at Kernville, Calif., and the story is one of those things in which an odd assortment of characters is thrown together under unusual circumstances. Wanger borrowed John Wayne from Republic at no small cost; incidentally, it was John Ford who discovered Wayne some seven years ago, when the young man was working as a prop boy.

Claire Trevor

Cecil B. DeMille gives you "Union Pacific," history from a movie angle, but history for all that. Darryl Zanuck contributes "Jesse James," which, if it even faintly resembles the stage play of that name, recently done in New York, should make you cheer.

And you'll see James Cagney in 'Oklahoma Kid" by courtesy of Warner Brothers. It is said that his characterization is based on "Billy the Kid," and that's interesting. Years ago, before Hollywood had whipped up interest in young Mr. Cagney, he was just one more of New York's actors, doing pretty well, but wanting to do better. Mary McCall Jr., now one of Hollywood's best scenario writers, learned that one of the major companies was about to do a picture based on the life and adventures of Billy the Kid, and she and her husband did all they could to persuade the governing powers that Cagney, a friend of theirs, was just the boy for the part.

James Cagney

He didn't get it. Hollywood didn't know him, which was their bad luck. Now he has his chance.

Speaking of actors who aren't appreciated brings up the young woman known professionally as Elsa Lanchester, and otherwise as Mrs. Charles Laughton. If you meet a motion picture producer kicking himself around the block you'll know that she is the reason.

For "The Beachcomber," made by Laughton independently, with the two Laughtons in leading roles, had no more than begun its showing in New York in late December than everyone began to rave about Elsa Lanchester's performance. She had everything! And Hollywood, when she was there with her husband, gave her no chance to do anything but the bride in "The Bride of Frankenstein" and a couple of bits. Better see "The Beachcomber" when it comes your way; it is being mentioned as one of the best of the year.

Not a few of our best movie stars are envying Joan Blondell and Dick Powell these days. For since they broke with Warner Brothers they can accept those tempting radio offers that they used to turn down, regretfully, because the studio wouldn't let them accept.

Jack Haley was busy enough to suit him before "The Wizard of Oz" came into his life, what with doubling in movies and radio. Now he figures that he'll have to spend exactly one month out of the next three on making up for his role of "The Tin Woodman" in the screen version of the Frank Baum story; three hours a day to put make-up on, three to take it off—231½ days altogether.

Lawrense Tibbett is preparing to commute from New York to Hollywood and back again this winter. He's been signed for that new radio program—known generally as "The Carole Lombard-Cary Grant program"—but he is also scheduled for frequent appearances at the Metropolitan Opera House, where he is one of the biggest draws. So he will flit back and forth, with practically no spare time except while he's flitting.

ODDS AND ENDS—Charlie Chaplin says that he positively will talk in his new picture, which will be a burlesque on the Hitler dictatorship . . . If he makes the picture as slowly as he has some others, there's danger that the European scene will have changed so completely that it will be ancient history . . . Loretta Young's sister, Polly Ann, has an important role in Monogram's "Sky Pirate," first of a series of six "Tailspin Tommy" features.

IRREGULAR MILKING MAY BE CAUSE OF HOLDING UP MILK

When bossy "doesn't let her milk down," it's not contrariness. It's because nervous reflexes which release the flow of milk are held up by fear, cold or some other condition over which she has no control says D L. Espe, Iowa State dairy husbandman

Properly cared for, a milking cow is "ready, willing and able."

Milking at regular periods—preferable 12 hours apart if on a twice-a-day schedule—is important Milking too early one day and too late the next, or following an "unbalanced" schedule upsets the milking reflex."

The new Republican administration has been forced to go into the used car business! When Governor Wilson gets through "house cleaning" he will have several hundred perfectly good automobiles to sell at public auction The surplus of cars is caused by vacating many offices not needed by the new administration Even the nice shiny big limousine used by former Governor Kraschel will be thrown on the auction block. Governor Wilson says he will use his own car and buy his own gas. Every Tom, Dick and Harry who has a state job isn't going to be furnished a car if Wilson has anything to say about it. The Republicans preached economy, and they are going to practice what they preach!

Bob Feller, the Iowa boy who jumped to fame in big time base ball got under our hide some time ago when he pulled a smart aleck stunt by getting himself arrested for speeding through city streets and his driver's license was taken away from him for a time. Bob maybe was showing off then but he is again back in our graces. A short time ago Bob appeared before a large group of boys and in his talk stressed that, in his opinion, the use of tobacco and alcoholic drink was a real detriment to athletes, and that he himself used neither. He pointed out that some prominent athletes used tobacco, and a few drank hard liquor, but he stated that his honest opinion was that if those stars neither smoked nor drank, that they would be even greater stars in the athletic world. Those statements that Bob made urging boys not to smoke nor drink, will carry a great weight with the young boys of Iowa who were present at that meeting or who read about it. Bob Feller is a great athlete admired by thousands of Iowa boys, and what he says goes a long way with the average boy. Bob is all right! He made a mistake, but he has more than rectified it.

An awful thought has just occurred to this scribe . . . mice will soon be extinct. Why? Because at the rate the local Runway Mouse Trap factory is turning out mouse traps, and all those traps are set and each trap catches a few hundred mice, the little animals will soon be all caught and there won't be any more! We are appealing to Walt Thada, proprietor of the factory to do something. We have suggested to Walt that he buy a chick hatchery and remodel it into a "mouse hatchery." Then Walt can raise mice to take the place of those caught in his traps. He can make more traps to catch more mice, and raise more mice to catch It's a good idea.

Whata pal, whata pal! This morn-This morning the temperature was down to about six below zero, the air cold and frosty when Ye Scribe received a peculiar article in the morning's mail which carried a Mason City post office cancellation and the address was written very much in the hand writing of one W. Earl Hall of the Globe-Gazette

Earl evidently felt sorry for this scribe out here in the sticks and visioned him making a hurry-up call to a little shack usually located in the back yard some place The mysterious article which we received in the mail was a heavy piece of corrugated cardboard which had two large holes neatly cut out and down in one corner was an inscription which read, "Winter Pad For The Two-Holer."

Thanks Earl, but we can't use it ourself, as we abandoned the old catalog house some years ago and have one of those modern contraptions right in the print shop.

But it all goes to show how thoughtful our friend Earl is. He is a real pal and we will certainly do something to repay him for his kindness . . . and, we don't mean maybe!

I-S-A-S

One of our good friends has a suggestion that is mighty good. It is a motto to hang in our new gymnasium when the school is built. He says people are always harping that athletes should be good sports His suggestion is that the motto should be so worded that it will remind the AUDIENCE that they should be good sports.

He further said that it was indeed very disgusting the way some of the fans criticised and jeered the players during a game, and generally displayed poor sportsmanship during the games, and then continually "knocked the team.

We agree with him. Most boys are fine sports when playing the game, but a lot of poor sportsmanship is heard from the fans along the side lines.

If you are that kind of fan, why not try to be a good sport at the games? Encourage, don't criticise; boost, don't knock; and above all, treat the visiting team with respect.

COURTESY

In school, we need to show courtesy as much as anywhere else. It is up to us, as students, to do our best in everything. In the various classes, give our strictest attention to the teacher even though we know all about the lesson. A person can really get some good points by listening and he may find out that he did'nt know as much as he thought.

We shouldn't try to make all sorts of unnecessary noises, such as shuffling our feet purposely while walking, about the assembly or halls, and try to tear the desks apart to have something to do, or to show off a little more.

One of the rudest things a student can do is to talk back to a teacher and do everthing she is opposed to. This makes enemies among students as well as with the teachers. We must remember that there are others who may be trying to study or to listen in class. but cannot on account of these disturbances.

At basketball games or any other activities, we try to be courteous enough to remember that other schools may have a good team too, and want to support it. We show our team that we are behind them, and other schools must do this also We try to be agreeable to each other when someone may suggest something and acknowledge their ideas, as one person may not always know what is best.

When going to classes, there should be no need of hurrying to get the best seat. After all, there really are enough for everyone.

When visitors came, everyone treats them kindly and tries to show them that they are wanted

It is wrong to think that just because there is going to be a new schoolhouse next year, this one can be torn apart. It is school property and some of the equipment, including some desks, have to be used in the new building for a while, at least.

If anyone pulls a trick over on another person, he must be able to take his own medecine and not think he is a privileged character

If you don't think cooperation is necessary, watch what happens to a wagon if one of the wheels comes off.

If we all cooperate and show more courtesy to each other, everyone will get along a lot better and we will have a better school to show to the pubic.—Doris.

Democrats. Kraschel is reported to have said as the election returns came in November 8th, "Well, I've seen snake eyes before."

WILSON'S ATTITUDE

Governor Wilson's attitude as evidenced by his inaugural reference to this same question stands out in sharp contrast and helps explain the widely divergent views of these two administrations. Governor Wilson said "We want for the people of Iowa that they shall be masters of their own households . . . that which the state can do better than the Federal government should be left to the state. that which the town or county units can best do should be left to them . . . we should restore their (the pioneers') way of mutual helpfulness . . . we should have honest administration of just laws, with fair consideration to every interest and every person . . . the government must be truly the servant of the people." Governor Wilson echoes the words "government for, by and of the people" as inscribed on the walls of the statehouse; the direct opposite of Kraschel's one man government idea.

WHee-ee-e-e!

Not only did the Democratic administration jump out and purchase some thirty-nine new automobiles in the last days of 1938, but it also purchased or contracted for office, commission and institution supplies in quantities sufficient to last for years to come. As a gesture of pique is was magnificent and typical. It may have been intended to embarass Republican attempts to consolidate and reorganize since much of this equipment was purchased for departments which have been mentioned in reorganization plans. If, as the people of Iowa have indicated by their vote, consolidation of services and the elimination of bureaus and commissions duplicating each others' services is desirable and wise, here is displayed an orgy of last minute spending by the outgoing administration that adds up to pure waste and utter disregard of even the fundemental of common sense.

STAMP TAX

Senator Dewey chooses the stamp method for his attack on the inequalities of the sales tax system Pointing out that payment of one cent tax on the fifteen cent purchase is really a levy of six per cent. Senator Dewey proposes to substitute stamps in denomination from one mill upward Thus a five cent purchase would carry a one mill stamp; the purchaser would pay only two per cent regardless of the size of his purchase and the merchant would remit to the state only actual taxes collected By the Dewey method the merchant would avoid time and energy spent in preparing reports for the state every three months The stamps would be furnished through the county treasurer and the merchant would be allowed a trifling percentage as compensation.

IOWA STAMP ACT

Boys and girls in school will recall references to The Stamp Act in their history books The Iowa cigarette law requires that a stamp indicating a payment of a two cent tax upon each package of cigarettes must be affixed by the merchant. These stamps are obtained from the state treasurer. Unscrupulous dealers have discovered a way to beat the state here too and some effort will be made to tighten up on these chaps Cigarettes are now wrapped in cellophane and the stamp does not adhere well unless the cellophane is roughed with steel wool. Chiselers have discovered the stamps can be slipped off easily and used again In all probability legislation will be proposed during this session requiring the manufacturer to affix the stamps at the factory before the outer wrapping of cellophane is applied It is estimated this will increase collections from this source by a million dollars In the face of this situation, State Treasurer Bagley has just discovered the outgoing administration has placed an order for 100,000,000—say that slowly, one hundred million, cigarette tax stamps even at a time when there were thirty or forty million in the vault.

King Cobra Most Feared, Also Most Intelligent

The king cobra, or hamadryad, of Burma, is the largest as well as the most deadly of poisonous snakes. Its average length is twelve feet, and individuals have been known to measure eighteen feet, which is three times the length of the common "hooded horror" cobra of India. The king cobra's intelligence, quick temper, extraordinary agility, and lethal poison makes it the most dreaded of all snakes, asserts Guy Murchie, Jr., in the Chicago Tribune.

The spectacular appearance of the king cobra and its terrifying reputation are enough in certain parts of Burma to cause it to be hunted by big-game hunters much as is the tiger in India and the Lion in frica. The only difference is, as Adventurer Gordon Sinclair once wrote: "You don't hunt the hamadryads. They hunt you. If you go out to track down a tiger the element of surprise is all yours. You ambush the tiger and smash him down. But you can't put a hamadryad on the spot; the surprise element is all his. He sees you coming and either lies in ambush for you or comes for you like a spluttering skyrocket."

According to one authority, the king cobra is the most intelligent of all snakes. It is one of the very few snakes, for instance, that realizes when in captivity that it must rely on its keeper for food. A slight vibration at the door of a king cobra's cage is enough to bring the snake at ful speed to the crack, where it will explore up and down the frame with flipping tongue in anticipation of receiving food. And it will invariably lift its head and anxiously look about at feeding time, even before the keeper has put in his appearance.

GET AMAZING RESULTS WITH HYBRID CHICKENS

Inbred Males Used On Random Bred Flocks Produce Superior Eggs And Chicks

Inbreeding and crossing—the 2 genetical practices which produced the miracle of hybrid corn—will within the next 5 or 10 years virtually "revolutionize the poultry industry."

This is the prediction of Dr. N F. Waters, Iowa State College research poultryman, who has been appointed to the staff of the region al poultry labratory at East Lansing, Mich.

Eggs More Fertile

Hybrid chickens—or more accurately "top-cross" chickens produced from mating inbred males with ordinary good quality flocks —have consistently out-performed chickens produced from random breeding at the Iowa State College Agricultural Experiment Station.

The differences are as amazing as those between hybrid and open-pollinated corn.

To begin with, eggs laid by hens mated to inbred cockerels were 86 per cent fertile, compared with 76 per cent fertility in the eggs from random-bred birds.

The fertile top-cross eggs showed 85 per cent hatchability, compared with less than 81 per cent for the random-bred eggs.

Fewer "Hybrid" Chicks Die

From the eggs which hatched, only 5.8 per cent of the top-cross chicks died before 8 weeks of age, while 8 per cent of the random-bred chicks died.

At 24 weeks of age, only a fraction more than 10 per cent of the top-cross chicks had died, compared with nearly 16 per cent of the other group.

Summed up together these advantages mean that for every 100 top-cross eggs at the start, one would have 64 chicks at 24 weeks of age, while from the same number of random-bred eggs only 51 chicks.

But the story does not end there

Not Fully Analyzed

Figures on the comparative productivity of top-cross and random-bred chickens after they begin laying have not been completely analyzed, but they show that in general the top-cross birds are consideralbly more productive.

Figures on mortalitly at one year have not been completely analyzed either. But these too are believed to favor the top-cross birds. But even if they are only equal, the known superiority of the top-crosses in other respects is sufficient to bring revolutionary breeding practices.

The figures reported by Waters represent the results of 5 years of research—1932 and 1934-37 with White Leghorns. The inbred lines go back 13 years and are the oldest in the United States.

Waters believes that in the future poultrymen will specialize in producing inbred poultry and top-cross hatching eggs for commercial hatcheries. Hatcheries themselves may operate inbred flocks. Some are already pioneering in this field.

LESSON TEXT—Luke 22:31, 32, 54-62.
GOLDEN TEXT—Let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall.—I Corinthians 10:12.

One of the most heartbreaking experiences we have as Christians is to find that one in whom we have had every confidence as a true and faithful follower of the Lord, has denied Him by going out into almost unbelievable sin. Often it seems that those who, like Peter, have had the loftiest and most inspiring fellowship with the Lord, and who speak with the greatest ease about His love and grace, turn to the most reprehensible of sins.

Lest any unbeliever who reads this begin to gloat over the failures of Christians, let him be reminded now of his own sin which needs his attention, and of the fact that though Peter fell, he arose again to victory and usefulness. May it also be said that none of us has any right to a "holier than thou" attitude toward a brother who has fallen. "Let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall" (I Cor. 10:12), and let him in brokenhearted sympathy help to restore his stricken brother "in the spirit of meekness: considering thyself, lest thou also be tempted" (Gal. 6:1).

I. Sifted but Not Destroyed (vv. 31, 32).

Satan, who is a far more powerful spiritual being than most folk think, is actively interested in tempting the Christian. He uses many clever devices. Although he is not possessed of divine powers, he does have supernatural cunning and knows the weakness of each one of us. He knew the boastful self-assurance of Peter and was ready to tempt him at that point. Jesus knew this, and even in this dark hour shortly before His crucifixion He takes time to warn Peter, and with His warning to give the assurance that though it was to be tried, his faith was not to fail, and that he was to be restored to fellowship and service when he "turned again," which is the correct translation for the word "converted."

II. Self-assurance and Disgraceful Failure (vv. 33, 34, 54-60).

Peter was sure of himself and of his consecration to the Lord. A man who stands in that place is in grave danger. It is not long before we find Peter, apparently presuming on his own ability to stand fast, consorting with the enemies of Christ, warming himself by their fire. Someone has suggested that the great spiritual problem of our day is not the conflict between the Church and the world; nor is it to determine how the Church can best serve in the world, but rather what to do about the world which has gotten into the Church. How did worldliness get into the Church? The members brought it there after they had gone out and warmed themselves at the world's fire, and fellowshiped with the world in ungodly living.

The denials made by Peter seem almost unbelievable in the life of one who had been in immediate fellowship with the Lord and who had seen His glory. We have here a revelation of the fact that "the heart is deceitful above all things and desperately wicked; who can know it?" (Jer. 17:9). We agree with Dr. Wilbur M. Smith: "This is of the Devil. This is humanity sinking to the lowest plane of base ingratitude. This is shame upon shame." One might have hoped that one denial would bring quick and sincere repentance, but instead it leads the way to a second and to a third. There seemed to be nothing that could stop Peter, until "the Lord turned and looked" at him. This suggests the only effective way to deal with backsliders. Argument, pleading, even shaming them, will do no good. We must bring them to the place where they meet their Lord.

III. The Look of Love and a Broken Heart (vv. 61, 62).

What was in the look of Jesus is perhaps best expressed by Alexander Maclaren: "It spoke of Christ's knowledge, of Christ's pain, of Christ's love."

The backslider needs first of all to realize that the Lord knows all about his denials and sin. He has been hiding things from his family and friends, denying accusations, trying to cover up his guilt. Let him now abandon every such effort. Jesus knows all about it.

The second thing to be realized is that he has added to the pain and sorrow of his Lord. For a believer to turn away from Him is no light matter, to be casually dealt with. He needs to be deeply conscious of the wounding of the heart of the Lord, as well as of the damage done to God's people and His cause in the earth.

But above all it was a look of love. The Lord deals in tenderness with the backslider. While he never can or will condone sin, He loves the sinner, and especially does He love the one who belongs to Him but who has gone astray. What a gracious Lord we do have!

HOW TO SEW

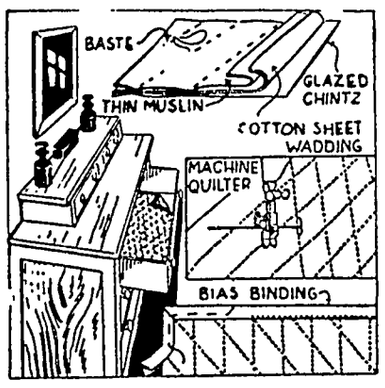
by Ruth Wyeth Spears



THERE seems to be no corner in the house where the decorators' art is not applied. Closets used to be drab and dreary places but now they are bedecked in scalloped shelf edgings, gay garment bags and bright hat boxes. Dresser drawers are also perking up. Time was when a clean newspaper was put in the bottom of a drawer every so often, and the date of the one removed proclaimed how long it had been since this housewifely task had been performed. Now, we make pads to fit the drawers. We scent them with our favorite sachet and find infinite joy in their soft colorings.

Machine quilting is just the thing to give the pads the stiffness and body they require so that they will lay flat in the bottom of the drawer and not wrinkle up. Glazed chintz in a plain soft blue with darker blue bindings is used for the pads made to fit the chest of drawers shown here. Thin muslin is used for the backing and sheet wadding for the the padding. When all three layers of material have been cut the right size, baste them together. The first row of basting is run diagonally across the center and then the rows are spaced about six inches apart as shown. Here also is a sketch of a machine quilter in operation. It is merely a foot with an indicator attached. The end of the indicator runs along each previous row stitched making an accurate gauge for the spacing of the quilting. After the pads are quilted, bind the edges as shown.

NOTE: Mrs. Spears' Book 2—Gifts, Novelties and Embroidery, has helped thousands of women to use odds and ends of materials and their spare time to make things to sell and to use. Book 1—SEWING, for the Home Decorator, is full of inspiration for every homemaker. These books make delightful gifts. Mrs. Spears will autograph them on request. Crazy-patch quilt leaflet is included free with every order for both books. Books are 25 cents each. Address Mrs. Spears, 210 S. Desplaines St., Chicago, Ill.

Sew for Now and Spring

IT'S fun to sew during the long winter evenings, when you use these simple patterns, each including a detailed sew chart, so that you can follow them with no trouble, and listen to the radio at the same time. Right now, the stores have grand bargains in fabrics, too, so it's certainly the time to get some sewing done. You can make such pretty things, and save so much money, by doing it.

Two-Piecer for Girls.

Here's a charming dress that girls in the 10-to-16 size range will love for school, and it's so easy to do that those who like sewing can make it themselves. The basque blouse hugs in (by means of darts), to make the waist look small. The skirt has such a pretty flare. Both can be worn with other things. Choose wool crepe, flat crepe, silk print or moire. It will be pretty, this summer, in crisp cottons, too.

Three Pretty Aprons.

Make this dainty, useful set of aprons now, and have it ready when spring weather arrives and people begin to drive up unexpectedly for meals. You'll enjoy having the aprons right now, too, when you serve refreshments to your club. This set is a nice party prize, and a gift idea for your friends who are brides-to-be. It includes two practical pinafore styles, both made so that they cannot slip off your shoulders when you have your hands in the dish water. Also, a sweet little frilly tie-around. Choose dimity, linen, percale or dotted Swiss.

About London

Travelers in London have one profound cry against the house numbering. They not only will find the odd and even numbers scattered along side by side, but when they are separated they will probably find No. 85 opposite No. 2 and No. 15 around the corner. Nobody in London seems to mind this condition.

My-- What Fun!

One of the most pleasant jobs of running a store is that of unpacking New Merchandise.

A few years ago, my children and their little companions would often gather at the store to help (?) unpack the big boxes of dry goods which arrived from time to time. They loved to watch the clerks unwrap the new ribbons, laces, silk goods, and novelties. The help of the children probably slowed up the job somewhat, but it was worth it just to hear their exclamations of delight as the pretty merchandise was brought forth from the magic packing case.

Even today, in the Furniture Store, we grown-ups get quite a thrill in uncrating and setting up the first carload of Furniture for Spring.

Our First Car for 1939 arrived Monday, January 16th. It will take two men a week to uncrate it.

It would be impossible to have all of our many customers stand around to watch us uncrate it. But, we do invite you in to look things over next time you come to town.

Every spring brings out New Styles, New Woods, New Coverings. You will want to see these whether you buy now or not.

And, like the children of yesterday, my customers are never "in the way." You are welcome as the flowers in May. Come look around any day.

Klemme Shamrocks Set Back To Second Place In Conference Tilt

SHAMROCKS LOST CONFERENCE GAME TO KANAWHA, FRIDAY NIGHT

Little Shamrocks Come Through To Lead In Eaglet Conference

The Klemme Shamrocks basket ball team were set back at Kanawha, Friday night after a defensive game saw the Shamrocks and Bulldogs tied at 10 all at the end of the half.

Grosshuesch looped in two and a pair of charity tosses and Grange rang up another from the field to give the Shamrocks 18 points at the end of the third quarter. Trainer for the Bulldogs sank three and Howlett took a toss to give Kanawha 17 points

The score remained 18 to 17 in favor of the Shamrocks throughout the last quarter, and with about a half minute of time left Howlett sank a field goal to put the game on ice for Kanawha who won 19 to 18.

Grosshuesch led the Shamrocks with 10 points, Kluckhohn and Buseman each 3, Grange 2, and Katter failed to score.

Howlett lead the Kanawha attack with 9 points.

Little Shamrocks Win

The Little Shamrocks, who have a perfect record in conference play, rang up another victory when they defeated the Bull Pups 14 to 12 in a tightly played game in which Wicks and Zabilka led the scoring with 5 each, while Schoenwetter and K Stille each picked up two. The Kanawha score was scattered with no one getting more than 2 points each.

The Little Shamrocks ride at the top of the Seven Eaglets with a 1 000 percentage. They have shown some fine basketball playing and should finish the balance of the race with an unmarred record in the Conference

Beck Visit, Czech Border Tiff Point Probable Nazi Course

By Joseph W. La Bine

Germany

Two events on one bleak January day, one at tiny Munkacs, Hungary, the other at lofty Berchtesgaden, Germany, gave puzzled European observers the key to future plans of the Rome-Berlin axis. The events:

Berchtesgaden. To Adolf Hitler's Bavarian eyrie came another visitor, Poland's Foreign Minister Joseph Beck. Colonel Beck was frightened because: (1) Germany has shown outright hostility by fomenting revolt in Polish sections of the vast Ukraine; has been busy Nazifying Lithuania's Baltic seaport of Memel; has Nazified the free city of Danzig and made other threats at closing Poland's precious "corridor" to the Baltic; (2) because one of Poland's allies, France, refuses to help her in wartime; (3) because another ally, Russia, is far away and would be of questionable assistance.

POLAND'S COLONEL BECK
He sought and found security.

Colonel Beck left Berchtesgaden after discovering he had much in common with the master of Europe. Though unannounced, the conference results are quite discernible. Having been granted security at Germany's mercy, Poland will play an important role in the Reich's campaign to create a Ukrainian republic, also serving as a rear guard while Berlin turns its attentions to helping Friend Mussolini win Mediterranean territorial concessions from France. Poland will lead in forming a band of armed, neutral states from the Baltic to the Balkans, protecting Germany from Russia. Poland will permit a German railroad and highway from East Prussia to Germany proper, across the Polish corridor. Most important, Poland will probably lead in Pan-Ukrainian agitation, serving as a "front" nation for the Reich.

Munkacs. Bad blood has stood between Czechoslovakia and Hungary since last November 2, when a German-Italian commission remarked the southern boundary of Carpatho-Ukraine (Ruthenia) and gave added territory to Hungary. Unpopular with Germans and Czechs alike was one Italian demand, that strategic Munkacs be ceded to Hungary. Munkacs is a key city in Germany's plan for vast Carpatho-Ukrainian fortifications, slyly planned as a threat to keep Russia intimidated while the Reich turns its attentions to winning concessions from France and Great Britain, both for itself and Mussolini.

When Czech-Hungarian hostilities broke out at Munkacs, the inspiration was obvious. This time using Czechoslovakia for a "front," Hitler was stirring up trouble which will lead to a re-demarcation of the Czech-Hungarian frontier, bringing strategic Munkacs back into his power. This done, the Reich has only to placate little Hungary. Then the chain of pro-German states will extend from Baltic to Balkans.

These things happened just as British Prime Minister Neville Chamberlain left for Rome, where observers expected him to make a deal with Mussolini. The probable deal: France would give Italy Suez canal rights and joint use of the Djibouti-Addis Ababa railroad. In return Italy would guarantee security for British shipping in the Mediterranean, also helping settle Britain's Palestine headache. But with Hitler once more turning his eyes westward, this could be interpreted as only the beginning. After helping Mussolini win his demands, the Reich will probably demand gigantic economic and financial concessions from the democracies; even going so far as to demand return of World war reparations. Mulling over these prospects, European democracies have good reason to fear 1939's eleven remaining months.

Races

Germany originally planned to finance deportation of Jews by making foreign powers buy her goods. The plan: Jewish emigrees would trade their money for—or be financed in the purchase of—German export products. This plan won little sympathy from either Britain or the U. S., but it at least offered a basis for negotiation by which the intergovernmental refugee committee could deal both with Germany and Italy. Since Italy's Jewish persecution is far less severe than Germany's, President Roosevelt contacted Premier Mussolini shortly after January 1, asking him to urge more leniency on Chancellor Hitler. Also suggested was the settling of Italian Jews (who must leave by February 1) in Ethiopia.

A week later, as Prime Minister Chamberlain left on his "appeasement" journey to Rome, it looked like President Roosevelt had inadvertently given the Rome-Berlin axis another weapon to hold over Democracy's head. Smart Mussolini, probably on advice from the even smarter Hitler, was willing to discuss the Roosevelt program with Mr. Chamberlain. Observers thought he would agree, but only if Mr. Chamberlain hastens French capitulation to Italian territorial claims. Meanwhile George Rublee, American director of the refugee committee, left for Berlin to negotiate with Hitler, apparently willing to consider a modification of the Reich's program to blackmail democracies into accepting unwanted Jews.

Interesting as a sidelight was the announcement of an Italian repatriation commission, whose duty is to make 10,000,000 racial Italians return from foreign countries, partly replacing the Jews now being ousted. But the drive's real purpose is to give Italy an uncomfortable surplus population, thereby backing her territorial claims in Africa.

Spain

Just before Prime Minister Chamberlain left London for Rome (See GERMANY), Premier Mussolini sent orders to Spain's Rebel Generalissimo Francisco Franco. The orders: Start an immediate major offensive, aimed to show Mr. Chamberlain that Loyalist Spain is collapsing and should therefore be sold out.

Aided by Italian troops, also by Italian and German planes and guns, General Franco started driving into northeastern Catalonia two days before Christmas. A fortnight later his offensive was sprawled over a 100-mile front, creeping slowly and painstakingly toward the coastal city of Tarragona. Though he boasted 300,000 troops, though his attack resembled the World war's Verdun, the showing was still too unimpressive to make Mr. Chamberlain jump through a hoop.

What made matters worse was news from south central Estremadura, where Loyalist Gen. Jose Miaja's Loyalist army had made a spearhead advance of 50 miles in five days, capturing rich mining lands on which General Franco depended for buying war materials abroad. Thoroughly angry, Franco ordered removal of his famous "radio general," Gonzalo Queipo de Llano, famous for his lusty broadcasts from Seville. Then he took steps to protect the Loyalist objective, the Seville-Salamanca railroad which connects northern and southern Spain. The only Franco recourse seemed to be withdrawal of thoroughly tired troops from the Catalonia front, which undoubtedly meant a loss of the bloody gains Rebel Spain has made in that sector since Christmas.

Medicine

Bright and dark sides feature Surgeon General Thomas Parran's annual report on the nation's health:

Dark Side. Some 40,000,000 U. S. citizens cannot provide for medical care during serious illness. About 360,000 more hospital beds are needed. Only a few states have satisfactory programs against pneumonia and cancer; tuberculosis and malaria are also serious. Venereal disease control appropriations must be increased immediately.

Bright Side. Death rate fell from 11.3 per thousand in 1936 to 10.9 in 1937, then to 10.8 in 1938's first six months. Infant mortality fell from 57.1 per thousand live births in 1936 to 54.4 in 1937 Most contagious diseases are decreasing Chief causes of death in 1937 (as usual) were heart diseases, cancer and other malignant tumors, pneumonia, cerebral hemorrhage and softening, nephritis, accidents (except automobile) and tuberculosis.

Relief

"Now that Mr. Hopkins has been made secretary of commerce you won't need all of this $875,000,000, will you?"

The questioner: New York's Rep. John Taber. His audience: Works Progress Administrator F. C. Harrington. The implication: That President Roosevelt's request for an $875,000,000 deficiency appropriation to carry WPA until the next fiscal year starts July 1, is too high, since Former WPA Administrator Harry Hopkins can now dispense patronage instead of relief funds.

If Administrator Harrington thought this reasoning was silly, he knew better than to say so. So did any other Roosevelt appointee who might be called upon to testify before a house or senate committee. For there was revolution brewing under the capitol dome, and most of it was concerned with spending and taxing. First the White House had requested "moderate" tax rises to offset farm parity payments and finance the first half of a proposed defense expansion program. The added cost: $422,000,000. Next had come the $875,000,000 to operate WPA until July 1, which was $125,000,000 greater than WPA deficiency estimates included in the previous day's budget message.

WPA'S HARRINGTON

Mr. Harrington knew that his WPA would have a harder time justifying its expenditures than would the agricultural department or the army. Placed into the house committee's record was a table showing that WPA expenses increased steadily through September, October and December, when the federal reserve board index showed business was booming. His defense: That relief rolls dropped from 3,112,000 on December 24 to 3,075,000 on December 31. His claim: That a slash of the deficiency appropriation to $500,000,000 would bring starvation to many unfortunates. Nevertheless it looked like Mr. Harrington would be lucky indeed to get $500,000,000.

Such incidents demonstrate that the Seventy-sixth congress is independent. If it grants Mr. Roosevelt's full budgetary requests for the next fiscal year—which is doubtful—the U. S. public debt will rise precariously near $45,000,000,000, which is the legal peak on treasury department borrowing. Anticipated daily is a White House request that the limit be raised.

Asia

Under the premiership of Prince Fumimaro Konoye, Japan came close to overthrowing China's Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek when Wang Ching-wei, one-time leader of the Kuomintang (Nationalist) party, agreed to make peace and head a puppet Chinese government. This three-man poker game first began collapsing January 1 when Kai-shek ousted Wang from the Kuomintang and sent him scurrying to cover in French Indo-China. The second player to withdraw was Prince Konoye, whose forced resignation from the premiership places Chiang in an even firmer position.

Prince Konoye has been succeeded by Kiichiro Hiranuma, a pro-Fascist and extreme nationalist, who would hardly sympathize with Wang's plans for an independent China. Premier Hiranuma's only offer to Wang could be leadership of an outright puppet regime like Manchukuo, and this he could not accept. Another fly in the ointment is Japan's military machine, now strengthened by the Fascist governmental tendency.

Glasses Need Not Detract From Beauty

By PATRICIA LINDSAY

SOME beauty authorities stress eye make-up if you must wear eyeglasses, but I stress hair styling and lip rouge.

In the first place, if your eyes are so weak that constant use of glasses is necessary, the less you tamper with them the better. The simplest care of daily bathing with a reliable lotion, and healing drops prescribed by your occulist, should be the extent of your fussing. Plenty of rest and eye exercise, of course, but no mascara nor eye shadow nor penciling.

Touch up your brows, yes, and keep them trim. But do not pluck them to a thin line. Many physicians offer the opinion that too frequent plucking of the eyebrows weakens the eyes. So you see?

Concentrate on Hair and Lips

Put on your glasses and sit before your mirror. Comb your hair softly around your face. Change your regular part. Experiment.

In most cases, hair brought down softly over the ears, fluffed a bit to fall out on the cheek, just below the ear shaft of the glasses, is the most flattering.

But if you are the sleek type, and comb your hair back from your face, then you must accent your lips to detract from the frames. Full lips of rich color, not too deep, does a lot for you.

Sleek or feminine in hair style, the manner in which you rouge your lips is most important. Try two lip sticks. The lighter color for the upper lip, the deeper tone for the lower lip. Liquid lip rouge painted on with a fine brush and a steady hand, is the most lasting It takes a little practice to apply it well, but it is worth the effort in the end.

Keep your hair glossy, with daily care, and nicely set. Keep your skin clear and your teeth sparkling white; your brows trim and your lip coloring intact and I can vouch that your eyeglasses will be hardly noticed.

If you feel the desire for some eye make-up rely on vaseline or a reliable eye oil with which to lightly massage your lids and lashes. They glisten and give some depth to the eyes, and are also beneficial.

Health Essential To Charm

A rule she teaches is: "Watch your health. Sleep, exercise and drink water. Too many women in this country are below par. Nothing reveals your character to people more quickly than the expression you carry, your voice and your state of health.

"If you are physically below par you may have a nervous disorder which should be taken care of, but otherwise you should be able to keep well by eating proper food at regular hours, getting eight, nine or ten hours of sleep, and by exercising in the fresh air and sunlight.

"Don't always complain of being tired and of things making you nervous. If your health is good you are not nervous, merely cranky, and people soon discover it. If your health is poor do something about it."

Strong words, aren't they? And here are some more well worth digesting and particularly suited to the growing girl.

"Don't count on being only beautiful. You can overestimate the appeal of a beautiful foot, a tiny waist or long lashes. Cultivate wit, humor, tact, genuineness. Pay attention to your posture, carriage and gesture. Develop gentleness of gesture, a pleasing manner. Be yielding in your dealing with others, never dictatorial, never too aggressive. And above all things be particular about your personal appearance. Dress neatly, appropriately, and with an eye to the decorative. Never, never be overdressed!"

HINT-OF-THE-DAY

Care of the Hair

Not all women can afford the luxury of having their hair done by a professional every week. But with a little practice, you can do a professional job yourself.

Cleanliness of the hair is the first requisite. This means a good shampoo at regular intervals. Then choose a hairdress that you can handle yourself. Stay away from anything elaborate or extreme That requires a really professional touch

If you want curls, make them few and substantial. The trick combs that curl and comb at the same time are a big help. For grooming, the maker of one of these combs has a quick drying lacquer that makes an excellent setting fluid The bottle has an atomizer, permitting you to spray the lacquer where you want it.

This lacquer helps tremendously with the new high hair-do Spray it on the stragglers at the back of your neck and comb them flat. Your hair will stay in place for a long time.

WHO'S NEWS THIS WEEK

By LEMUEL F. PARTON

NEW YORK.—Dr. Robert H. Goddard, experimenting with rockets for the last 24 years, and steadily making progress, has had as his goal the penetration of the higher atmosphere, the possible catapulting of messages across the ocean, and sundry scientific inquiries to which he has thought his unique gunnery might supply the answer. Although much Jules Vernish stuff has been written about his "rockets to the moon" and about shooting people across the Atlantic in a few minutes, he has been an aloof and patient scientist, intent on seeing only what he sees and not making any handsome promises.

Dr. Goddard Has Both Feet On This World

So far as this courier knows, the suggestion by Maj. James R. Randolph that rockets may replace heavy artillery, for long-range bombardment of cities, is the first official recognition of their possible use in warfare. He specifically cites the work of Doctor Goddard, at a time when Doctor Goddard is piling up new patents and getting some of his biggest sizzlers under control. It is also the time when the tiny, motored plane, evolving from the toy, and controlled by radio, is absorbing the interest of the army experimenters as a possible bomb-dropper.

At Roswell, N. M., financed by the Daniel Guggenheim foundation, Doctor Goddard has a unique desert laboratory with plenty of elbow room and sky room. He now has a gyro steering mechanism on his rockets, by which they may be accurately aimed. He has gained 30 per cent in range over his best shots of two years ago, and is now forcing his rockets to a speed of 700 miles per hour.

His most valuable contribution to rocketeering, noted by Major Randolph, is his continuous flow of power, instead of the single initial explosion. Gasoline and oxygen, mixing and exploding as they issue from a tail nozzle, give steady propulsion.

Doctor Goddard, an amiable, unassuming, baldish man, began his rocket experiments at Clark university in 1914. He is a physicist, absorbed in pure science, admitting that we might hit the moon with a rocket if we wanted to spend that much power, but so far he keeps down to earth on immediate and specific problems—and makes progress.

IT DOES begin to look as though scientists will be the loudest of all when "Beulah Land" rings out at the next singfest. Once upon a time, religionists looked warily whenever a man of science opened his mouth, because so many of them were arguing against a hereafter. But Sir Richard Gregory, with his "It is just as permissible to assume that another world awaits habitation of an exalted type of humanity as it is to believe in the eternal existence of individuality," is only the latest of many to hit the sawdust trail.

Church and Test Tubes Are Teaming Up

Emeritus professor of astronomy, Queens college, London, is one of his present distinctions, and he is also a former editor of the magazine, Nature. The stars have been his chief guide for most of the years since he was born in 1864. How much their lessons helped him to his knighthood, 1919, and his baronetcy, 1931, is a question. But certainly, along with his acknowledged interest in heaven, they must take responsibility for his chief books, "The Vault of Heaven" and "Discovery, or the Spirit of Service of Science."

PROF. WALTER B. CANNON of Harvard avoided a mistake made by Howard Scott. When Mr. Scott appeared as the John the Baptist of technocracy, he started taking our measure for its immediate application. When Professor Cannon put out "biocracy" several years ago, as a cure for the ills of the "body politic," he made it clear that we could take it or leave it. Hence, while biocracy is still in the suspense file, Professor Cannon finds honor and advancement as the newly-elected president of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, which body is driving for some grand scale rationalization of science and society. That's the main idea of biocracy—a society which is not at war with the life force.

Cannon Cure Not Crammed Down Throats

He is one of the most distinguished physiologists in America, given to novel research. He is the discoverer of a method by which we may hear our brains ticking.

...w to Curtain a Group of Windows

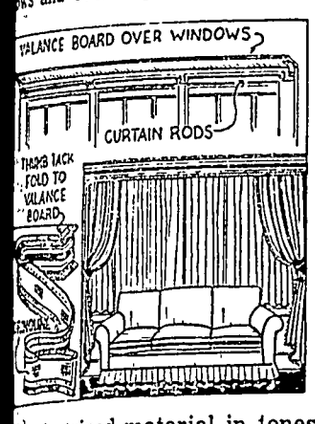
BY RUTH WYETH SPEARS

DEAR MRS. SPEARS: I want to tell you how much practical help I have received from both your books. I have been sewing for years but these books have explained many points that I never understood before. I am now planning new draperies to dress my living room up a bit. The group of three windows is especially difficult as the davenport has to be placed in front of them. Can you give me a suggestion? I think I would like a plain valance without gathers or pleats across the top. How should this be made and hung? I have just made a beige slipcover for the davenport with green pipings and cords.—A. D. W."

I would use plain cream colored lace curtains for all three windows and overdrapes at the ends



ply. A striped material in tones of tan and green and blue would be nice for the draperies with a narrow fringe edging in green and tan or green and blue. A valance board at the top of the windows is essential when a plain valance is used. This board should be four inches wide and ½ inch thick. It is screwed in place with L brackets. Ordinary metal curtain rods are placed just under it for the lace curtains and side drapes. The plain valance should be long enough to fit around the ends of the board and should be about six inches deep finished. It should be stiffened with an interlining of buckram, and an allowance should be made at the top for a tuck or fold to be tacked to the board as shown. Be sure to save this lesson as it is not in either of the books offered below.

New Book on Franklin Restores Him to His 'Grand Dimensions'

In His 800-Page Biography of the Famous American, Whose Birthday We Celebrate on January 17, Carl Van Doren "Rescues Him from the Dry, Prim People Who Have Claimed Him as One of Them" and Tells What He Really "Did, Said, Thought and Felt."

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

THIS year's celebration of the anniversary of Benjamin Franklin's birth should have a greater significance to his fellow-Americans than ever before. Especially is this true if they have read a biography of him published recently.

Perhaps it would be more fitting to refer to it as THE biography. A great many books have been written about him, covering every period in his long and remarkable career and dealing with every phase of this "most versatile American." But for the first time in three-quarters of a century a biographer has undertaken to bring the whole of his life, with all the necessary details, into a single narrative long enough to do it justice.

The biographer who has done this is Carl Van Doren and his 800-page volume, published recently by the Viking Press of New York, is undoubtedly the "last word," the final full-length portrait of the man who was born 235 years ago—on January 17, 1704.

The general outlines of Franklin's life story is a familiar one to most Americans. They know of his boyhood in Boston, his work as an apprentice printer in the shop of his brother, James, and his start as a publisher, at the age of 17, when James incurred the displeasure of the authorities and young Ben had the task of getting out the New England Courant.

They are familiar with the story of his quarrel with his brother, his going to Philadelphia, there to walk down the street with a huge roll of bread under his arm and to be laughed at by pretty Deborah Read who later became his wife. Familiar, too, are the tales of his becoming foreman in the printing office of Samuel Keimer, his partnership with Hugh Meredith in publishing also interested in politics and public affairs—that he served as clerk of the Pennsylvania assembly and afterwards as a member of it; that he established the postal system in this country; that he first planted the idea of a union of the colonies with his famous "Join or Die" snake cartoon; that he was indispensable to General Braddock in securing the waggoners necessary for hauling that leader's supplies on his disastrous expedition; that he went to England to represent the colonies in the dispute over the Stamp Act and thus started upon the career as a diplomat which was to bring him his greatest fame.

And these are only a few of the activities of the "many-sided Franklin" which have been made the Pennsylvania Gazette and his successful career as a printer and publisher which enabled him to retire from that business at the age of 42.

In the meantime his career as a philosopher had begun—in his "Poor Richard's Almanac," which spread his fame throughout the colonies, and in his formation of the Junto, a club in which he and his fellows discussed all manner of philosophical questions. Science next attracted him and most familiar of all the stories about him is that which tells of his interest in Leyden jars. For that led to the famous incident of the kite, the silk handkerchief, the rainstorm and the charge of electricity which ran down the twine to the key tied on the end of it. Of course, Benjamin Franklin didn't "discover" electricity, but he dramatized it, and when he wrote monographs on his experiments Europe began to take notice of this American colonial.

Americans know that he was familiar to his fellow-Americans mainly through his "Autobiography," which he began writing in 1771. But according to Carl Van Doren, just because Franklin is best known from his "Autobiography," he is too little known. For, says this biographer,

". . . In that masterpiece of memory and honesty he dealt with his years as a rising tradesman and did not reach his more memorable years as imperial prophet, revolutionary statesman, cosmopolitan diplomatist, scientist, wit, moralist, sage. He never found time to carry out the history of himself as he intended. But the materials which he would have used still exist, scattered in journals, letters, and miscellaneous writings through his manuscripts and his collected and uncollected works."

So Mr. Van Doren set himself to the task of drawing these materials together and arranging them "in something like the order he might have given them. Nor are they mere raw notes for a book. He seldom wrote a line without some characteristic touch of wit and grace. Most of these materials need no rewriting to make them match the unfinished story they continue."

Although the biographer thus makes his task sound simple, the fact is that it was a monumental one. More than 10 years have elapsed between the time he started this biography and its completion. The very abundance of the new material which his research unearthed added to his difficulties, since it led to the temptation to let his book run beyond a readable length. However, the completed biography of more than 800 pages, "full as it is, is a biography cut with hard labour to the bone."

Not the least of the interest and value of the book is the new material which the biographer mentions. Concerning it, he says in the preface:

"Here first in any Franklin biography appear (in part) his 'elegy,' recently discovered and apparently his earliest writing that has survived; information about James Franklin's New England Courant based on the file kept, almost certainly, by Benjamin Franklin; an analysis of the hundreds of sayings of Poor Richard which Franklin left out of 'The Way to Wealth,' thereby much narrowing his reputation as a maker and sharpener of adages; various details of his business, domestic life, and personal expenditures taken from manuscript account books and advertisements in the Pennsylvania Gazette; a more exact discussion than has thitherto been printed of his surreptitious writings and of his 'Reflections on Courtship and Marriage'; a critical examination of the kite-flying episode; the narrative of Franklin's first diplomatic mission, to the chiefs of the Ohio Indians at Carlisle; the lifelong story of his affectionate friendship with Catherine Ray, with unpublished letters from her; his campaign as a soldier, known in full only to readers of a single monograph; his record in Pennsylvania politics as shown in the executive and legislative journals of the province; the insurance company's description of his house in Philadelphia; an unpublished manuscript in which he outlined his programme of opposition to the Stamp Act; a note on his meeting with Baron Munchausen and Raspe his chronicler; a circumstantial account of the Grand Ohio company from which Franklin hoped to make a fortune in land speculation; his acquaintance with James Boswell; two fables by Franklin published in 1770 but lost sight of until 1936; a comparison of two versions of Wedderburn's attack on Franklin, one as printed by the British government and one as remembered by Franklin's friends; the neglected record of his activities as chairman of the Pennsylvania Committee of Safety; an unpublished letter to General Schuyler written during the mission to Canada; an accurate report of the conference with General Howe given directly from the minutes; the amazing melodrama of the British spies who surrounded Franklin in Paris; new translations of three of his Passy bagatelles, written by him, so far as is known, only in French."

Although Franklin is best known for his prose writings, for his ability as a "maker and sharpener of adages," such as those which he put in his "Poor Richard's Almanac," the fact is that his writing career started with a poem! It was an "Elegy on My Sister Franklin" which, Van Doren says, was "only recently discovered and is now first mentioned in a Franklin biography. The precise date of the elegy is still uncertain, as is the name of the sister-in-law whose death called it forth . . ."

Warm from my Breast surcharg'd with Grief & Woe
These melancholy Strains spontaneous flow
Flow from a fav'rite Sister's sad Decease
Flow from the worthiest of the female Race . . .
My dear my much-loved Sister!—O my Friend
We in this World on nothing may depend:
For soon as we esteem ourselves possest
Of every needful Thing to make us blest
Some Friend's Demise (like hers we now lament)
Casual Mischance, or tragical Event
Like an intrudent Guest will intervene
Frustrate our Hopes and mar our blissful Scene.
How weak! how vain! how void all mundane Joys
A Medley fraught with Nonsense, Shew and Noise
O what is Life which we so high esteem
A Bubble, Vapous, Shadow, Fleeting Dream
From sordid Dust we sprang & surely must
Or soon or late return to native Dust
What mortal Man even in his best Estate
All Vanity, Pride, Folly and Deceit . . .
Crowns have their Thorns and Opulence its Bane
And all our Pleasures their Alloy of Pain
All the Vicissitudes of Life declare
Uncertainty alone is certain here . . .
No sublunary Blessings long endure
And from Death's Clutches nought can us ensure
Who o'er all Flesh maintains a sovereign Sway
And Millions fall his Victims every Day
Nor Worth, Wit, Beauty, Wealth or Power can free
From rigid Fate's immutable Decree . . .
Else might this worthy Saint whose wayward Fate
We now deplore have claimed a longer Date
Of circling Years her Kin to serve and bless
Enjoy her Friends and Life's good Things possess . . .
And tho' I humbly trust our Friend deceas'd
Is wafted to the Saints eternal Rest
Yet her sad Exit maugre my Resolves
In Woe's profound Abyss my soul involves
With Sighs & Groans my lab'ring Bosom swells
And down my cheeks Grief's mournful Stream impels
May Heaven forgive me if I ought offend
Whilst thus I mourn my dear departed Friend
Sure Heaven forbids not for our Friends to mourn
Nor to bedew with Tears their peaceful Urn

FRANKLIN IN PHILADELPH A
From a portrait by Robert Feke (?) or John Greenwood (?), painted probably about 1748 and now owned by the Fogg Art Museum of Harvard university.

"These are perhaps the earliest surviving words of Franklin, written when he had not yet finally decided between poetry and prose," says his biographer.

After reading young Ben's first literary effort (it was probably written when he was 17 or 18 years old), one can't help being grateful that he decided in favor of prose!

In explaining why he has gone into such detail in this biography, Mr. Van Doren says it is because "Franklin led a detailed life which in a general narrative loses colour and savour. But the chief aim of the book has been to restore to Franklin, so often remembered piecemeal in this or that of his diverse aspects, his magnificent central unity as a great and wise man moving through great and troubling events. No effort has been made to cut his nature to fit any simple scheme of what a good man ought to be.

"Here, as truly as it has been possible to find out, is what Franklin did, said, thought, and felt. Perhaps these things may help to rescue him from the dry, prim people who have claimed him as one of them. They praise his thrift. But he himself admitted that he could never learn frugality, and he practiced it no longer than his poverty forced him to. They praise his prudence. But at seventy he became a leader of a revolution and throughout his life he ran bold risks. They praise him for being a plain man. Hardly another man of affairs has ever been more devoted than Franklin to the pleasant graces.

"The dry, prim people seem to regard him as a treasure shut up in a savings bank to which they have the lawful key. I herewith give him back, in his grand dimensions, to his nation and the world."

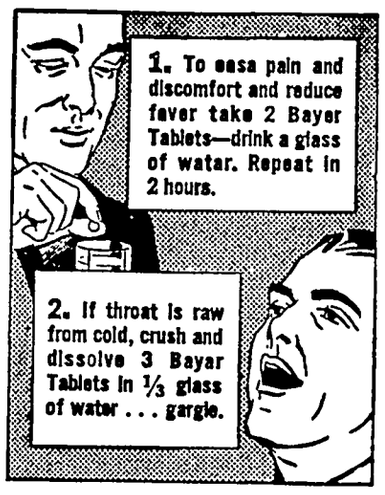
HOW TO RELIEVE COLDS

Simply Follow These Easy Directions to Ease the Pain and Discomfort and Sore Throat Accompanying Colds



1. To ease pain and discomfort and reduce fever take 2 Bayer Tablets—drink a glass of water. Repeat in 2 hours.
2. If throat is raw from cold, crush and dissolve 3 Bayer Tablets in ⅓ glass of water . . . gargle.

Try it. Then—see your doctor. He probably will tell you to continue with the Bayer Aspirin because it acts so fast to relieve discomforts of a cold. And to reduce fever.

This simple way, backed by scientific authority, has largely supplanted the use of strong medicines in easing cold symptoms. Perhaps the easiest, most effective way yet discovered. But make sure you get genuine BAYER Aspirin.

Many visitors to the office of Governor George A. Wilson will recognize the courteous, gentlemanly Negro who first greets them in the outer office of the governor's suite He is Douglas Miller and by no means unfamiliar with his duties He first served under Governor George W Clarke from 1913 to 1917 and remained with Governor William L. Harding from 1917 to 1921 and Governor N. E. Kendall from 1921 to 1925. He has been chosen again by Governor Wilson and he seems to reflect the pleasant, cordial atmosphere of the new Chief Executive's quarters.

Liquor-by-the-drink has also appeared on the legislative stage through a bill offered by Senator Ross R Mowry of Jasper Both these measures have their groups of sponsers hopeful of enactment but it goes without saying that neither encompasses the entire program of attempts to improve or change the current method of control in the state. There will be others as there has always been As long as there is liquor and as long as there are legislatures there will be efforts by militant groups to alter the existing system. These have always in the past and perhaps will always in the future vary in shade from strict prohibition to the open bar Regardless of the current choice succeeding legislatures face ever recurrent efforts to revise and improve. The question never becomes static It is ever on the move, forward or backward, depending upon the individual viewpoint.

REORGANIZATION

Crafty opposition to the Republican reorganization program has sought for several weeks to create the impression that the plan was intended more to discipline one office than to improve services and reduce costs. However, the first bills given approval by the joint committees prove conclusively the program is not directed at any particular office. These bills propose a new department of public safety which will combine the highway patrol from the Secretary of State's office, the Bureau of Investigation from the Attorney General's office, and inspection services from the office of the Secretary of Agriculture, Treasurer of State, State Fire Marshall, Commerce Commission and Department of Labor. In this first gesture alone annual savings of more than $100,000 seem possible with no impairment of services.

SLOT MACHINES

Speculation regarding Attorney General Fred D. Everett's attitude toward slot machines, punch boards and similar devices was ended when the Attorney General issued a letter to all County Attorneys which in substance said he was looking to them to enforce the laws. The Attorney General in a courteous letter assumes that all law enforcement officers, sheriff's police departments, day and night marshalls as well as the County Attorney's office, will perform their duties and calls attention to the section of the code which provides that "any neglect, misfeasance or malfeasance" will be sufficient cause for dismissal.

COMMON SENSE POLICY

An old saying is that honesty is the best policy. Most of us realize this as a truth, perhaps from actual experience, or otherwise. Another top-ranking policy is the common sense policy. We often hear the expressions "Be sensible," Use your cow sense," "Stop to think and you'll think to stop," and "Make use of your head other than just for a hat rack." These expressions magnify the significance of such an everyday term as common sense.

There are many practical applications of the common sense rule, many of which are put into use in activities at school. I presume most students possess some degree of it; that is, judging from all appearances, I have seen no insane. idiotic, feeble-minded, epileptic imbeciles among our numbers. For instance, one of our Freshman Man Tr. students when asked by a senior to bring him a lumber stretcher, might by application of a little common sense come to the inevitable conclusion that there was no such thing, and thereby spare himself the humiliation which would surely have been his.

One may readily see how much some people use their common sense when we recall an instance of a short time ago when the men from Mars were supposedly invading our country. At times when we are in great need of our common sense, we lose all we ever had So let common sense have its way and perhaps it will save the day. Here's yours for a better understanding and I don't mean big feet.

Those neither absent nor tardy the first semester were Mildred Patterson, Evelyn Arnold, Elsie Thiemann, Adala Wille, Ruth Stille, John Swichtenberg, Bernadean Lundy, Frederick Bell, Billy Zabilka, Aaron Wille, Luella Thiemann, Garland Brinkman and Melvin Coobs.

The freshmen have been writing bibliographies in English They also learned how to use a library

The senior home economics girls are finishing up the unit on child development. They are all very anxious to start on their woolen dresses.

The freshman business training class received new work books for the last semester They also planned some itineraries — some going south, east and west.

Mr. Graverson from the Russell Studio was here Wednesday and showed the seniors different style frames for their pictures, which will be taken in a few weeks.

Mr Cooper was here Friday, and the seniors picked out their graduation announcements and cards.

The junior boys are taking manual training this semester in place of typing. The girls are still taking typing, and are trying to work their speed up. They are doing a fine job of it, too.

The juniors are sorry to say that Margie B. has been absent all week. I think she is due for a surprise when she gets back to shcool.

The national Wildlife Federation is completing plans for its second annual sale of wildlife poster stamps. Several changes have been made in the stamps this year, notably the inclusion of 80 designs compared with the original 16, and printing in 6 colors as compared with the 4 color stamps of last year.

Stamps will be available in sheets of 100 at $1, or singly at 1c each. A double size stamp also will be available for distribution this year. The Federation plans to make available a poster stamp album for the insertion of the two series of stamps, for the convenience of persons desiring to keep the stamps permanently.

Thirty-five per cent of the proceeds from the sales in each state will remain in the hands of the state federation for the financing of conservation programs of the organization within the state, the remainder goes to finance the national program of the federation.

New Soft Styling Technique Calls for Definite Fullness

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

OF KEEN interest to seekers of the coveted "something different" that adds zest to each season's modes are the excitingly new silhouettes given to fashions through the soft styling technique that makes fullness its theme.

The versatile ways in which the new fullness is manipulated impresses one. In some instances skirts are frankly full all around, inspired no doubt by the dirndl vogue that has been having a successful run for some time. The all-around pleated skirts will hold good among foremost fashions not only for midseason and spring, but their style prestige will endure the whole summer through. Unpressed pleats is also a favorite method with designers for acquiring desired fullness. Then, too, there is the circular-cut skirt that measures yards around the hem. It is getting lots of notice especially in the very new petticoat versions which are made to reveal a swish of taffeta or a splash of white that repeats the pique neckwear which finishes off the blouse. These petticoat dresses are providing a big sensation on the new style program.

For women who cannot stand for more than a certain amount of fullness, the new skirts that make particular appeal show a controlled treatment in that they are smooth at the back and hips with fullness brought to the front in gathered or pleated panels. In both day and evening clothes this idea is carried out.

This matter of soft styling and intriguing fullness is by no means confined to the skirt but rather is consistently worked throughout the costume so as to preserve continuity in the unifying way. The smart coat and dress shown in the illustration tell the story better than words.

The stunning coat is typical of the new trend to fullness. It is made of a rust-color wool in handsome texture. The definitely full skirt is balanced with a soft blouse top which has roomy sleeves gathered full into the wrist. A small muff and a hat of red fox complete the ensemble.

Very significant is this coat as to new color trends for spring. In the early collections special emphasis is placed on the importance of rust shades and mustard yellows and kindred hues with jewelry accompaniments of amber topaz and like stones. For immediate wear style-alert women are selecting chic little dresses tailored of sheer woolens with a sophisticated simplicity that abounds in dramatic details.

Rows and rows of shirring achieve fullness for the dress pictured. This very high-style model by International is the type sure to call forth compliments wherever you go. Shirring at the waistline achieves a flattering dirndl. The bodice above the slim mid-riff corselet adds a related soft touch. Horizontal shirring on the sleeves gives them that casual "pushed-up" look that indicates "last word" chic. Expert designing makes it a perfect dress for a busy social calendar that carries from luncheons to informal dinners and the theater. The three jewelled pins at the waistline are individual. A soft kid bag, kid gloves and a simple felt hat with face veil complete the costume. With her upsweep hair-do she wears small, clip earrings foregoing any ornaments at the V-neckline.

Smart Plaid Coat

Plaids had such a good start this winter their style momentum is carrying right through into the midseason and early spring style picture. A coat like the one shown here will prove a real joy during the coming months. The plaid itself is in green and brown. The wide bindings of plain green enhance the picture of a charming box coat for winter. Large mother-of-pearl buttons add a final note of chic.

Pleated Vogue to Repeat Triumphs

Pleat it! And again fashion says pleat it, which is exactly what designers are doing for spring. Only this time the pleatings are more so than ever. That is the pleated mood permeates the whole scheme of things from neckline to hemline

In the newer fashions it is not only the skirt that is pleated, but the whole thing, including blouse top sleeves and just as like as not a pleated bolero is added.

The use of pleats is taking on a decidedly designful flair. The versatile way pleats are being handled is clever beyond words. You see most unique touches especially in blouse styling such as pleats brought down from each shoulder to tie in a soft knot at the girdle top. Surplice pleats that cross from shoulder to shoulder finishing in a bow at the waist-line with pleated streamers. Much of the charm of the newer print frocks lies in the fact of their lavish and unique pleatings.

Flounces Return With a Flourish

Of all things, guess what's coming! It's flounces on your new frocks. Yes'm flounces old-fashioned, now new-fashioned flounces. The idea of flounces has been taken up by designers with a will and if you would be "first" in fashion you take your cue right now and select for your newest gown one of the smartly flounced versions. The flounce trend is as apparent in day dresses as in evening floor-length party frocks.

Choice for Evening

The stiff silks being used for evening gowns are tulle, faille and taffeta, while moire and grosgrain are the choice for stunning afternoon dresses.

PETER DECLARES HIS LOVE

LESSON TEXT—John 21 11-19
GOLDEN TEXT—If ye love me, keep my commandments.—John 14 15

"Lovest thou me?" This is the question our Lord asked Peter. It comes to us today. Do we love our Lord? It is a simple question, but also a very searching one. "We may know much, and do much, and profess much, and talk much, and work much, and give much, and go through much, and make much show in our religion, and yet be dead before God from want of love . . . There is no life where there is no love . . . Knowledge, orthodoxy, correct views . . . a respectable moral life—all these do not make up a true Christian. There must be some personal feeling toward Christ" (J. C. Ryle).

The instructive story, the center of which is Peter's declaration of love for Christ, presents a picture of a life of true devotion and service to the Lord we love.

I. Fishing at Christ's Command (v. 11).

Peter had led the disciples in a fruitless fishing expedition (vv. 2, 3). There may have been some unbelieving self-will in his "I go a-fishing." It may also have been the need of food on the part of the disciples who had not yet been sent forth to preach. But in any case they caught nothing until they went to work at the Lord's direction.

Useless and pathetic is the effort of the Church to win men to Christ except as He directs and blesses the work. He knows when, where, and how we ought to fish for men. Let us seek His guidance rather than suffer the disappointment which goes with man-directed campaigns and "drives." As a matter of fact, we need more divine directing and less human driving.

II. Fellowship With the Lord (vv. 12-14).

There are some folk who seem to think that following Christ is a doleful matter, devoid of every pleasant contact. Jesus never taught any such thing. He attended weddings and dinners even in the homes of those despised by men. Remember that He always did it for their spiritual good, not merely for His own enjoyment; and that He always brought the gathering up to His own spiritual level, rather than stooping to any worldly or wicked standards.

Here we find Him with a glowing fire upon which fish is broiling and with bread ready for the hungry fishermen It is just like Him thus to meet in most delightful and satisfying fellowship those who serve Him. Draw up to the fire, Christian friends who are standing afar off. You may be so timid that, like the disciples, you will not dare to call Him by name (v. 12), but if you will come you will find that the precious fellowship will soon warm your heart.

III. Feeding His Flock (vv. 15-17).

Many (perhaps most) after-dinner speeches and conversations yield little profit Here is an occasion when such was not the case. One wonders whether we would not be wise to take the suggestion and turn our thoughts and those of our dinner guests to spiritual things. Surely it should be so among Christian friends and in a Christian home.

Three times Peter is asked to declare his love for Christ. Such a public confession was quite in place, before the man who had thrice denied his Lord is restored to a place of leadership. The words "more than these" (v. 15), indicate that Jesus was asking of him a high measure of devotion. It is no more than He has a right to expect of us.

The expression of love to Christ means practically nothing except as it manifests itself in service. We, like Peter, are to be diligent about feeding His flock, whether they be the young and inexperienced lambs, or the mature sheep of the fold. Observe that we are to catch the fish (the unconverted) and feed the flock (the redeemed). Sometimes it seems that we are trying to catch the Christians to forward some scheme of advancement, and failing to win the unconverted, because we are feeding them spiritual food that belongs to the flock of God.

IV. Following Christ to the End (vv. 18, 19).

The Christian (and surely the Christian worker) is to glorify God even by his death (v. 19). What a significant reply John Wesley made when his followers were criticized: "At any rate, our people die well." Peter was to go on to the end, knowing that he faced martyrdom for Christ.

But we are not only called to die like Christians, we are to live for Him. When Jesus "had spoken this, he saith unto him, Follow me" (v. 19). Just as we said that the Church needs more divine directing and less human driving, so we say that the crying need of the Church now is not more leaders, but a greater host of faithful followers of Jesus. Will you, because you love Him, follow Him in life and death?

WHAT to EAT and WHY

C. Houston Goudiss Reports Some Current Knowledge of Vitamin G, a Substance Essential to Growth and Normal Nutrition

By C. HOUSTON GOUDISS

A NUMBER of the vitamins have been discussed in these columns from time to time. The latest findings of nutritional science have been related, together with suggestions made by outstanding authorities concerning the amounts of different vitamins required to help maintain top health.

So far vitamin G has not been discussed specifically. Yet a knowledge of some of the functions and sources of this vitamin should be possessed by every homemaker. For eminent authorities are of the opinion that it has a far-reaching influence upon health.

Possible Effects on Longevity

The avowed objectives of modern nutritional scientists are to help humanity to enjoy happier, healthier and longer lives. If any one vitamin could be said to have more influence than any other on longevity, the distinction most certainly would be accorded—so far as present knowledge is concerned—to vitamin G.

Extensive laboratory experiments by investigators who are paramount in their field seem to indicate that vitamin G has a pronounced effect upon the maintenance of health and vigor at all ages. It has been demonstrated with experimental animals that a diet containing more vitamin G than is required for normal growth resulted in greater vigor, a postponement of the onset of senility and a comparatively short period of the mental and physical infirmities we usually associate with old age.

Effect on Digestion and Nerves

Laboratory experiments have also indicated that when there is a shortage of vitamin G, digestion is usually impaired. In this respect, a shortage of vitamin G has a slightly different effect than a deficiency of vitamin B. A definite lack of vitamin B causes an abrupt and complete loss of appetite. Withholding vitamin G appears to affect the desire for food, so that experimental animals consume only about two-thirds as much as they would normally take.

A form of nervous depression may occur when the diet is low in vitamin G for any protracted length of time. Other unfortunate consequences may be a decline in the health of the skin. Studies with animals indicated that when the vitamin was withheld, not only did a loss of weight occur, but there were other signs of nutritional failure. These included an inflammation of the mouth, a loss of hair, a thickening and in some cases, a cracking and scaling, of the skin.

Vitamin G and Healthy Eyes

Studies with a variety of experimental animals resulted in the startling disclosure that on diets lacking vitamin G the health of the eyes was distinctly affected.

Not only was there a loss of hair around the eyes, but the eyeball developed a whitish appearance which was determined to be cataract.

At present, scientists are not prepared to say whether these laboratory findings may be confirmed clinically. But certainly when we know that in many ways, the food requirements of experimental animals are comparable to those in man, it would be distinctly to our advantage to make sure that we do not lack for adequate amounts of vitamin G.

Sources of Vitamin G

Because vitamin G is closely associated with vitamin B, some homemakers occasionally confuse the two. This is not surprising, inasmuch as it was some years following the initial recognition of vitamin B that scientists established beyond a doubt that there was more than one growth-promoting vitamin. Subsequently, they learned that while the substance, later named vitamin G, was frequently found in close association with vitamin B, such was not always the case. For example, vitamin G is known to occur without vitamin B in egg white.

Milk, Meat, Eggs, Greens

The richest sources of vitamin G are the concentrates of yeast, yeast extract and wheat germ. Almost equally well supplied with this vitamin are liver and kidney. Muscle cuts of meat contain vitamin G, but in lesser amounts than liver and kidney.

The vitamin is also found in young green plants, and it is interesting to note that the vitamin is formed during the growth of the plant and decreases with maturity. The amount of the vitamin has been found to vary with different parts of the same plant. In broccoli, the flower buds are said to contain only half as much as the leaves, while the stems contain even less. Among the greens, turnip tops and beet tops have been found to be unusually rich. Investigations indicate that weight for weight, they are twice as rich as eggs, though eggs are considered a good source.

Homemakers will be glad to learn that heating does not appear to destroy vitamin G. Canned foods are therefore as good a source as though they had not been processed.

Milk must not be overlooked. For all practical purposes, and chiefly because of the amounts in which it is consumed, it is probably our most important source of the G vitamin.

One thing is certain. Homemakers should strive—not for diets that are merely adequate in vitamin G . . . but for a surplus to help build high resistance. One authority has advised a ration that contains four times the amount considered absolutely necessary.

The surplus should help to provide a headstart toward the goal of buoyant health.

Lovely and Simple Designs

LONG winter evenings, when you're home a lot anyhow, offer a splendid time to get some sewing done. You'll enjoy it, when you use these simple designs, each accompanied by a step-by-step sew chart for the guidance of beginners. So start right now.

With Bias Skirt.

The swirling dress with bias skirt is fashion news—decidedly. It's so simple, and so lovely. The tiny waist, the square neckline, the puff sleeves and rippling skirt, all have the romantic charm of an old-fashioned portrait. Make this of flat crepe, silk print or thin wool and trim it with lace or embroidery. Both will be very smart for spring, when feminine fashions are all the rage.

Three Pretty Aprons.

This set will come in mighty handy when company drops in unexpectedly for meals, or when you serve refreshments to your club. Make several sets for gifts, too—bridge prizes, tokens for brides to be, and so on. All three of them fit exceptionally well, so that they protect your frocks without adding a bit of bulk. Each requires so little material that you can make them from remnants left over from house frocks and daytime cottons.

The Patterns.

No. 1659 is designed for sizes 12, 14, 16, 18 and 20. Size 14 requires 4½ yards of 39-inch material; 2⅛ yards of embroidery or lace banding.

No. 1595 is designed for sizes 34, 36, 38, 40, 42, 44, 46 and 48 Size 36 requires: for No. 1, 1⅞ yards of 35-inch material with 6 yards of braid; for No. 2, 1½ yards of 35-inch material with 5¼ yards of braid; for No. 3, 1⅝ yards of 35-inch material, with 11 yards of braid.

Send your order to The Sewing Circle Pattern Dept., Room 1020, 211 W. Wacker Dr., Chicago, Ill. Price of patterns, 15 cents (in coins) each.

AROUND the HOUSE

Items of Interest to the Housewife

Heat the Coconut. — Before breaking a coconut, heat it in a moderate oven. Crack it and the shell will come off easily.

When to Add Salt.—Salt should never be added to stews, soups and boiled meats until after they're cooked. If put in at first it toughens the fiber of the meat and takes out the juices.

When Papering.—It is well when papering a room to remember that large patterns and dark colors will make it appear smaller, while a plain or striped paper, if a light hue, will give an impression of increased size.

Fighting Oil Blaze. — Never throw water on blazing oil. It will only spread the flames. Earth, flour or sand will extinguish the fire, but if these are not at hand a thick rug or curtain should be thrown on the burning oil.

For Scratched Furniture.—The best remedy for scratched furniture is a mixture of beeswax and turpentine, the former melted in the turpentine until it is as thick as sirup. Pour a little onto a piece of woolen cloth and rub it well into the scratched part. Then polish quickly with dry flannel and the marks will almost disappear.

Baking Potatoes.—Potatoes will bake more quickly if, after peeling, they are wiped dry and smeared over with dripping before being put in the oven.

Cleaning Tapestry.—Clean tapestry-covered furniture by rubbing it with hot bran, reheating the bran as it gets cold. Have two dishes of bran going, one to be using and one to be in the oven heating.

Larger Windows.—A small window may be made to look larger by setting the curtain rods beyond the casing on each side and using the draperies of a material heavy enough so that the casing will not be seen through the material.

Funeral Service Held For Klemme Woman At Former Home In Illinois

AGED KLEMME LADY DIED FRIDAY FOLLOWING ILLNESS AND STROKE

Funeral Services Held In Illinois Tuesday For Mrs. Ben Swalve

Mrs. Ben Swalve, 80 years of age, died at her home in Klemme early Friday, January 27, following an illness of two weeks, which ended in a stroke Mrs. Swalve had been in failing health, however, for the past two years.

Funeral services for Mrs. Swalve were held at her residence in Klemme, Monday morning at 9:30 in charge of Rev. Calvin Gross- huesch. A quartet from the Re- formed Church, Mrs. A. H. Dulmes, Mrs W. L. Thada, Harvey E. Barz and Edwin Thiemann, provided the singing.

The pall bearers were Herman Priebe, John Swalve, Clarence Swalve, Albert Priebe, Edw. Beck- er and Edgar Buss.

After this service the remains were taken by the Wellemeyer Funeral Coach to German Valley, Illinois, 298 miles, to the home of her sister, Mrs. Ben Hinders, and funeral services were held Tues- day afternoon in the Silver Creek Reformed Church near German Valley. This is a large church built of limestone 79 years ago. Rev Paul Achterman, the pastor being absent from home, Prof. H. E Schoon conducted the service and Prof and Mrs D Waalks provided the singing Miss Lauretta Osterloo presided at the pipe organ.

Obituary

Mathilda Siemens was born De- cember 2, 1858 on a farm near Rio- dot, Olga county, Illnois. Her par- ents, Julius Siemens and Mary (nee) Harberts, were natives of Germany.

When an infant she was baptiz- ed in the Silver Creek Reformed Church and as a girl she received her education in the rural schools of the community.

At the age of 26 years she be- came the bride of John Langeland and she lived with him for 19 years, when he became ill and died and his funeral was held at the Sil- ver Creek church.

She then purchased a home in Baileyville, Ill., where she resided as a widow for 14 years.

On August 23, 1927, she became the wife of Mr. Bernard Swalve and since then she has been a res- ident of Klemme. Four years after their marriage Mr. Swalve passed away.

For the past two years Mrs. Swalve has been failing in health and for the past two weeks she had been bed fast. She passed away early Friday morning, January 27, 1939, having reached the age of 80 years, 1 month and 25 days.

Of her immediate family she leaves on adopted daughter, Mrs. Mabel Herbig, Rockford, Illinois; one sister, Mrs. Ben Hinders of German Valley, Ill., and three brothers, John Siemens of Bailey- ville, Ill., Frank Seimens of Free- port, Ill., and William Siemens of Pecatonica, Ill. ## International

Why, they did not know, but from every nook and cranny of the world came statesmen bound for Geneva where under leaden skies opened the 104th session of the League of Nations. Spokesmen admitted the League was forgotten in a new era of "power politics" in which four nations (Britain, France, Italy and Germany) appeared destined to guide the world to war or peace. Geneva's convocation would have been dolorous anyway, but on its eve two great statesmen met in Rome and found they could not agree. Overnight, with lightning speed, the forces of democracy vs. dictatorship shifted to more positive, more threatening positions.

When British Prime Minister Neville Chamberlain went to Rome for consultation with Premier Benito Mussolini, he knew his political future hung in the balance. For 18 months he had subscribed to the unpopular course of appeasing dictators. Munich's "peace" treaty had been followed by Italian territorial demands against Britain's ally, France. Invocation of the Anglo-Italian friendship pact had been followed by an even more aggressive Italian participation in the Spanish war. Obviously appeasement was a failure.

When, after two days of conversations, Mr. Chamberlain left for home without an announcement, the world knew what had happened. Appeasement as a peace weapon was abandoned. Britain had straightened up, deciding to lead with her chin instead of the palm of her hand. This news had hardly been flashed before news of resultant developments began flashing back from key world capitals:

BUDAPEST

Almost unnoticed the day Mr. Chamberlain arrived in Rome was the announcement that Hungary had recognized Japan's puppet state of Manchukuo. The past few years have seen Hungary vainly attempting to straddle the fence, keeping peace with Germany and Italy, meanwhile maintaining cordial relations with Britain. But Count Stephen Csaky, foreign minister, has been squinting at new developments with an eye to changing his position. A week before the Rome-London conversations, Poland — Hungary's unofficial ally in eastern Europe—had abandoned her independent position and tightened her bonds with Germany. Count Csaky realized this left Hungary uncomfortably isolated. When news from Rome heralded a sharpened definition of policy between democracies and dictators, Count Csaky decided to cast his lot with dictatorships. Thus Hungary joined the Italian-German-Japanese pact against communism and made plans to leave the League of Nations. A safe prediction is that Poland will follow suit.

To strengthen the Rome-Berlin axis even more, Italian Count Galeazzo Ciano, Mussolini's foreign minister, is making a tour of the Balkans with special emphasis on Jugo-

BARCELONA

French sympathies in the Spanish civil war lie with Loyalists; Italy's sympathies—and support—lie with Rebels. This animosity has widened the Rome-Paris breach over Italian territorial demands in Tunisia, Corsica, Djibouti and other French points. Just before Mr. Chamberlain left for Rome, Rebels began a well-timed offensive in northeastern Catalonia, aimed to show the prime minister that Loyalist Spain was weakening and should be sold down the river by democracies. But when Chamberlain refused to concede the point, Mussolini's controlled press announced it would be "absolutely useless to speak of arbitration and mediation" in settling Europe's problems until the Insurgents won the Spanish war.

As if to hasten this outcome, the "Chamberlain offensive" swept into Catalonia and drew near Barcelona. Obviously Mussolini wants to wind up the war, release his troops from Spain and consolidate his position in the Mediterranean in preparation for renewed demands against France. Meanwhile, in Paris Premier Edouard Daladier's Radical Socialist party demanded government intervention to prevent a Rebel victory in Spain, arguing that such an outcome would threaten France's Mediterranean communications.

PARIS

There no longer remains doubt that the French-Italian argument will supply Europe with its next crisis. Prior to the Chamberlain-Mussolini conversations it looked like France might have to face this dictator threat alone, thanks to Britain's hesitancy over insulting Germany and Italy. But immediately after the conference British Foreign Secretary Viscount Halifax left for Geneva where he met French Foreign Minister Georges Bonnet. It was authoritatively learned that Halifax assured Bonnet that England will go to France's aid if she is attacked by any other country, including Italy.

Halifax and Bonnet obviously held their meeting in Geneva—just as the League sessions opened—to bolster League prestige and give some semblance of international support to the Anglo-French position.

TOKYO

When London heard that Chamberlain had abandoned his appeasement policy, the foreign office immediately emboldened itself like a youngster with a new slingshot. Looking around for places to drain off a long pent-up wrath, it turned attention first to Japan. Tokyo's conquest of China has been tolerated by Britain simply because a stern position would incur the anger of Japan's anti-communist friends, Italy and Germany.

For some time there have been hints of U. S.-British "parallel action" against Japan for violation of the 1922 nine-power pact which guaranteed China's "open door." But this parallel action has heretofore been one-sided, as witness the huge U. S. credit grant to China compared with Britain's tiny credit allowance. But Washington's strong protest note to Tokyo last December 31 was velvet smooth compared with the protest British Ambassador Sir Robert L. Craigie was called upon to hand Japan after the Rome conversations. Excerpts:

"His majesty's government is at a loss to understand how (former Japanese premier) Prince Konoe's assurance that Japan seeks no territory and respects the sovereignty of China can be reconciled with the declared intention of the Japanese government to compel the Chinese people . . . to accept conditions involving surrender of their political, economic and cultural life to Japanese control. . . . For their part, his majesty's government desires to make it clear that they are not prepared to accept or to recognize changes of the nature indicated which are brought about by force."

SIGNIFICANCE

Behind the Mussolini-Chamberlain impasse which precipitated these events was the unseen hand of U. S. disgust over London's vaccilating foreign policy. But just as important was London's assurance that the U. S. planned to build up its armed forces under President Roosevelt's two-year, $552,000,000 emergency defense program. Regardless of the cause, regardless of the resultant consolidation moves by totalitarian states, both France and Britain are inclined to believe they have seen the last of democratic concessions to dictators. The greatest fear is that this new and sensible policy has been adopted too late, that Germany and Italy have attained an undisputable upper hand in the few short months since Munich.

Religion

In prosperous years church membership and attendance remains even or shows a very slight increase. During depressions membership and attendance will rise through a return to religion. Foremost among U. S. religious statisticians is Rev. Dr. Herman C. Weber, whose report for 1937 has just been released.

Salient facts and figures: Total membership early in 1938 was 64,156,895, church members having increased 960,000 in 1937 (twice as fast as the population). Churches increased by 1,743. A trend to church unity was evident, since 97.3 of the total U. S. church population belongs to the 50 larger bodies. About 160 smaller bodies account for the remaining 2.7 per cent.

Communication

An important weapon in the spread of Nazi economic-political influence is propaganda. So important has this weapon become that at December's Pan-American conference in Lima, Peru, delegates adopted a resolution condemning it. But for five years the government-subsidized Transocean News Service has operated via wireless from Berlin to Latin America, providing slyly propagandized world news coverage to newspapers at small cost. Its purpose: To win Latin American markets for the Reich, meanwhile spreading political doctrines. In answer to Pan-American conference resolutions, Transocean News Service is now being modernzed and speeded to South America. Just opened is a new transmitter at Buenos Aires, while another is being built at Lima.

Congress

President Roosevelt won little applause January 4 when his State of the Union speech referred to the unpopular governmental reorganization bill. Congress thought it best to leave well enough alone, but since the session got under way two reorganization schemes, one of them far more important than the administration's proposals, have been broached:

Relief. Reluctantly the average U. S. citizen admits unemployment and old age assistance have become permanent problems. Created by the New Deal, pioneering agencies to cope with these needs have worked too independently, often wastefully. Social security, WPA, PWA, CCC and NYA all have a common denominator, but not until this year has anyone bothered to suggest it. Headed by South Carolina's Sen. James F. Byrnes, a special senate committee on unemployment and relief has now proposed creation of a new department of public works to handle all such duties except social security. The three basic recommendations:

SENATOR BYRNES

(1) Co-ordination of state unemployment compensation systems under federal law, with U. S. financial assistance, providing 13-week payments ranging from $5 to $15, depending on salary over the 26 weeks before an unemployed person lost his job; (2) increased federal participation in state-federal old age assistance, to provide minimum of $15 a month compensation; (3) an anticipated, annual U. S. public works appropriation.

Should the proposal be adopted, relief and security would still hold plenty of headaches for congress Left to be ironed out was President Roosevelt's proposal of "social security for all," under which old age and unemployment insurance protection would be given every U. S worker as soon as possible. Other points in the administration's social security program: (1) increased protection to aged and dependent children; (2) establishment of merit system for state social security personnel; (3) advancing social security's pension starting date from 1942 to 1940.

Defense. Far less noteworthy than the Byrnes report but significant of the reorganization trend is the thus-far anonymous proposal to pool army and navy under a single cabinet officer. Its aim: To co-ordinate defense. Though similar measures have reached congress before, most of them failed because of traditional, leather-necked rivalry between the two branches of defense. This session's bill has a better chance because the proposed special rearmament program needs a single guiding hand, not several.

C. Houston Goudiss Analyzes the Food Values of Nuts; Discusses Their Place in the Menu

By C. HOUSTON GOUDISS

THERE is one food that can lay claim to being almost universal. It is eaten with relish by people in almost every quarter of the globe. It forms a main article of diet for the natives of some tropical countries, and is said to have been important in the dietary of early settlers in America. I refer to nuts.

Nuts, of course, are seeds. But unlike most other seeds used for food by man, they grow in a hard shell that does not open naturally when ripe. This forms a sealed package which makes nuts easy to store, and comparatively easy to keep.

A Concentrated Food

Nuts are a highly concentrated food and provide a large amount of food value in a small, convenient form. Once they are shelled, there is very little waste in using them. It has been suggested, therefore, that they might profitably appear in the daily menu far more frequently than they do.

There are many different kinds of nuts, and they vary in composition. Some of them contain large amounts of both protein and fat. Others contain a preponderance of fat, while a third group is starchy.

The protein of many nuts has been found to be rather similar to that in meat and fish. In fact, most nuts are classed as complete proteins, meaning that their protein is of a type which is capable both of supporting growth and repairing worn-out body tissue.

Comparison With Grains

Because they are somewhat similar in nutritional character, nuts have been compared to various grains. In regard to protein, however, they may be said to serve as a supplement to the proteins of some grains.

The high fuel value of many nuts is due to their fat content. Coconuts, pecans and walnuts are especially rich in fat, containing respectively 50.6 per cent, 70.5 per cent, and 64.4 per cent of fat. A few varieties, such as chestnuts and lichi nuts, so popular with the Chinese, are more notable for their carbohydrates. Like most starchy foods, chestnuts are improved by cooking, and therefore, are preferably roasted before eating. Fresh chestnuts contain a little over 42 per cent and dried chestnuts a little over 74 per cent of carbohydrates.

Mineral and Vitamin Values

The amount of mineral salts in nuts varies with the type. Generally speaking, however, nuts are considered a rich source of phosphorus and a good source of manganese and of copper and iron, required for the formation of the hemoglobin or red pigment in the blood.

Most nuts are considered a poor source of calcium; or at best only a fair source of this mineral which is required for helping to build teeth and bones. Two noted investigators, however, determined as a result of careful experiments, that in adults the calcium of almonds was fairly well utilized by the body. It is not as well utilized, however, as the calcium of milk.

Nuts are not regarded as a significant source of any vitamin except B, though some kinds have also been found to contain vitamin A. As they are frequently served in combination with fruits, however . . . in salads and as desserts . . . the fruit-nut combination usually supplies a substantial amount of minerals and vitamins.

Place in the Menu

Because of their content of protein and fat, nuts are frequently compared with meats and may be used interchangeably with meats. They make a splendid protein food to serve at lunch, supper or even dinner. They are especially good when combined with vegetables, or a carbohydrate food such as rice or noodles, and made into croquettes, patties, and casserole combinations that constitute a one-dish main course.

A Food—Not a Tidbit

Nutritionists are of the opinion that nuts might well constitute a larger part of the American dietary . . . chiefly because they are such an economical source of protein and of energy values. Though they can be used for a main dish as an alternative to meat, it is advisable to allow them to replace milk or eggs.

It is highly desirable, however that homemakers and their families regard nuts as a food and not as a tidbit to be served at the end of a meal that is already nutritionally adequate.

Thorough Mastication Desirable

It is also important to encourage the thorough chewing of nuts as this helps to make them more easily digestible. For children, nut butters are especially desirable. Some nuts are also prepared in the form of meal or pastes. In these forms it is not difficult for the digestive juices to penetrate them, and nuts may be considered as easily digestible as other foods of similar composition. Because they are highly concentrated, as we have seen, it is also advisable to include foods containing a generous amount of bulk or cellulose when nuts are included in the menu.

Inward Guidance

In a word, neither death nor exile, nor pain, nor anything of the kind is the real cause of our doing or not doing any action, but our inward opinions and principles.—Epictetus.

The Penguin

Penguins are perhaps the most unusual members of the bird kingdom. Their home is the frozen wastes of the south Polar seas. They have wings, but cannot fly. Their short, chubby legs are so far back that, on land, they walk upright, appearing like stout, little men in evening dress.

The female lays a single egg, and the birds spend most of their lives afloat, feeding on fish and mollusks. Their wings, useless in the air, serve as flippers in the water, and they are marvelous swimmers.—Washington Post.

Sun Down, Accidents Up

When the sun goes down, traffic accidents go up. More than [illegible] per cent of all fatal traffic accidents occur at night, the National Safety Council reports. Since about a third of the driving is done at night, it estimates, the number of traffic deaths per mile is about three times as great at night as during the daytime.

In the past seven years, night accidents have increased 60 per cent in rural districts, the report says, and only 17 per cent in cities. Adequate lighting and divided highways tend to reduce headlight glare and accidents, the council said. Some states are experimenting with new reflector buttons placed along the side of the road to show the alignment of the highway on curves, hills and other hazardous places.

Constipated? You Should Get at the Cause!

Lots of people think they can't be "regular" without frequent trips to the medicine chest. "I just dose up and get it over," they tell you. But doctors know they don't "get it over" at all—until they get at the cause of the trouble!

Chances are it's simple to find the cause if you eat only what most people do—meat, bread, potatoes. It's likely you don't get enough "bulk." And "bulk" doesn't mean a lot of food. It's a kind of food that isn't consumed in the body, but leaves a soft "bulky" mass in the intestines and helps a bowel movement.

If that fits you, your ticket is a crunchy breakfast cereal—Kellogg's All-Bran. It contains the "bulk" you need plus the great intestinal tonic, vitamin $B_1$.

Eat All-Bran every day, drink plenty of water, and just watch the old world grow brighter! Made by Kellogg in Battle Creek.

WHO'S NEWS THIS WEEK

By LEMUEL F. PARTON

NEW YORK. — Mushing along with Jim Titus, an old desert rat, about twenty miles southeast of Tonopah, many years ago, this scrivener was alarmed by the approach of what seemed to be a savage sandstorm. Old Jim, who seemed to know everything, reassured me. "It's that young feller Key Pittman. He's runnin' around in that big rattletrap automobile of his tryin' to get up a telephone company. Just kickin' up a dust—that's about all. No peace for anybody around here."

Mr Pittman roared on through the greasewood, to set up his new telephone company, sluice a tidy little fortune out of that and sundry mining ventures, and to become chairman of the foreign relations committee of the United States senate. He backs up the President.

Case-Hardened Diplomat, Ticket Key Pittman

"Why shoot a man when you can starve him to death?" says Mr. Pittman, indorsing the hint of "financial sanctions" against world outlawry in the President's address. He readies his committee for action.

In Nome, Alaska, Mr. Pittman was a charter member of the Mummery Men's club, organized at Tex Rickard's bar. Years later, Ole Elliott, Tex Rickard's partner, reorganized the club in Tex's northern saloon in Goldfield I believe Mr. Pittman's affiliations were with the Montezuma club, down the street, but he was a highly esteemed alumnus of the Alaska chapter and he found enthusiastic "sourdough" backing in his financial and political enterprises. Since 1913, Nevada has been sending him regularly to the senate.

He has been steadily against Japan—that is, against strong-arm Japanese trade and military aggression—and quite as fervently for silver. Well up in the headlines today is the conjecture that the President's new trade and credit militancy will move first in the direction of Japan.

Born in Mississippi, educated in Tennessee, practicing law in Seattle, Mr. Pittman landed in Dawson, Alaska, with a Canadian dime in his pocket. He manned a unilateral bucksaw for a few months before he was appointed district attorney. Jack London and Rex Beach found him a rich pay streak of copy.

THE son of a Buffalo dock worker, one of nine children, who had been in labor wars in his youth and through his lifetime, has sought ways to end them, was influential in bringing about the truce in the New York taxicab strike. He is the Rev. Father John Peter Boland, chairman of the unique New York State Labor Relations board since June, 1937. During his incumbency, New York has attracted the attention of the nation in its industrial mediation.

"Stop them before they get started" is his formula, as he quotes the pope's encyclical, advising priests to "go to the workingman." When he was appointed to his present post, he retired from his parishes of St. Nancy and St. Columba, with the blessing of his bishop, the Rev. John A. Duffy of Buffalo. He became profoundly interested in techniques of labor mediation while studying for the priesthood in Rome. He urges regular meetings between employers and employees and continuous and constructive effort, rather than emergency action when trouble comes.

Opportunity, as Cop Knocked With Nightstick

WHEN the young German immigrant, Max J. Kramer, landed in New York and slept on a park bench, he had no "Don't Disturb" sign. Hence a policeman wakened him by whacking his feet with a nightstick. It was really opportunity knocking. The policeman, who happened to speak German, steered him into a carpenter's job, and, before long, he was buying and building hotels with the facility of a child handling building blocks. That was the only time he ever slept out.

Last May, his wife, Maria Kramer, bought the 30-story Hotel Lincoln for $7,000,000 cash, tooling it over into the black in less than six months. She is a linguist, has made a career as a fashion expert and interior decorator.

Mr. Kramer, who had $3.50 when he landed, built more than 500 tenements, and, in 1925, had more than $100,000,000 worth of buildings under construction.

Anniversaries During 1939 Recall The Fame of the Chouteau Family

First of Line, Born 190 Years Ago, Helped Found the City of St. Louis; Another, Born 150 Years Ago, Was Head of the Company, Organized 100 Years Ago, Which Played an Important Part in Making St. Louis the "Fur Capital of the World."

Chouteau's Trading Station Near Kansas City (A part of the sculptural frieze on Kansas City's new city hall).

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

AMONG the anniversaries to be celebrated during 1939 are several connected with the famous family of Chouteaus. In fact, there are so many of them and so important was this family in the history of the West that it might not be amiss to call this a "Chouteau Anniversary Year."

The first of the line, born 190 years ago, helped found a city that was once the "Gateway to the West." Another, born 150 years ago, was the head of the company, organized 100 years ago, which played an important part in making that city the "Fur Capital of the World."

There are other anniversaries, too—for "years ending in 9" seem to have been constantly recurring dates in the history of this family. Arranged chronologically, here are some of those dates:

1749—In September of this year there was born to M. Rene Auguste Chouteau and his wife Mme. Marie Therese Chouteau in the French city of New Orleans, a son to whom was given his father's name, Rene Auguste Chouteau. Rene Auguste Chouteau Sr. is said to have been cruel to his wife, whom he had married when she was only fifteen years old. So they separated.

Living in New Orleans at that time was a thirty-eight-year-old merchant named Pierre Laclede Liguest who fell in love with Marie Therese Chouteau. Historians disagree as to succeeding events. Some say that she simply went to live with Liguest (or Laclede, as everyone knew him and as he was later to be known to history), while others insist that there was some sort of civil marriage, despite the fact that M. Rene Auguste Chouteau was still living.

At any rate she bore Pierre Laclede four children, all of whom took the name of Chouteau. One of them, born in 1758, was given his father's name, Pierre

In 1763 the French governor of Louisiana granted to Laclede and five associates the exclusive right of trading, for eight years, with all the Indians in the vast Missouri river valley and authorized him to build trading posts in that region. Laclede organized a fleet of keelboats and flatboats which he loaded with supplies and in August of that year started up the Mississippi with a force of about 30 men and boys, two of whom were his stepson, Auguste Chouteau, who appears to have been Laclede's chief lieutenant, and his son, Pierre Chouteau.

In December they reached the French village of St. Genevieve where they expected to spend the winter. But being unable to find there a house large enough to shelter his supplies, Laclede was glad to accept the offer of the commandant at Fort de Chartres to store his goods there. A little later he took Auguste Chouteau with him and set out in a canoe upriver. They went as far north as the mouth of the Missouri river, then drifted down the "Father of Waters" 17 miles until they reached a high wooded region rising from a limestone bluff.

"This is the place, Auguste," said Laclede. And thus St. Louis was founded.

1789—On January 19 of this year was born in St. Louis, Pierre Chouteau, son of Pierre Laclede Chouteau. At the age of fifteen he became a clerk for his father and uncle in their fur-trading operations which resulted in the organization of the Missouri Fur company in 1808. Associated with him in this company were his four brothers, Augustus P. Chouteau, Francis Gesso Chouteau, Frederick Chouteau and Cyprian Chouteau. Five years later the Missouri Fur company was absorbed by John Jacob Astor's American Fur company.

1819—In this year a branch of the American Fur company was established in St. Louis under the general direction of Samuel Abbott. The Chouteaus and others who had been connected with the old Missouri Fur company then became interested in the American and were given favored positions in the new firm.

Pierre Chouteau, Jr. and his brother, Francis, traveled throughout the present states of Missouri, Kansas and Nebraska, establishing trading posts and acquiring the business of local independent traders. They established trading posts along the Osage river and on the Mississippi from Keokuk to St. Paul.

Among the posts which they established was one on the Kaw (then known as the Kansas) river about 20 miles from its mouth, which was selected to be the seat of a general agency for the company. Pierre Chouteau's original hut, built in 1821 about three miles below the present site of Kansas City, was washed away by a flood in 1826 and he rebuilt on higher ground in what is now known as Guinotte's addition to Kansas City. This marked the beginning of Kansas City as a fur-trading center, a role which, incidentally, it maintains to this day.

In 1827 Frederick Chouteau established a trading post in what is now Douglas county, Kan., and three years later moved it to the present site of Valencia on Mission Creek. Although part Osage, Frederick Chouteau lived much of his life among the Kaw Indians. His brother, Cyprian, married Nancy Francis, daughter of John Francis, hereditary chief of the Shawnees and lived with that tribe. It was through such intimate relations as these that the Chouteau brothers established themselves solidly with the Indians and profited thereby in their trading operations.

1829—On February 24 of this year died Auguste Chouteau, the pioneer, in the city which he as a lad of fourteen, had helped found. He had also founded a "dynasty of fur," for by this time the Chouteaus were becoming the dominant force in the fur trade of the West. They became ever stronger in 1834 when Pierre, Jr. and his associates purchased John Jacob Astor's interests in the American Fur company.

1839—In this year was organized a new company under the firm name of P. Chouteau, Jr. & Co., and it became the greatest fur-trading company in American history. Under its banner the Chouteaus extended their operations as far south as the Cross Timbers of Texas, as far north as the Falls of St. Anthony in Minnesota and as far west as the Blackfeet country in Montana. They also engaged in trade over the historic Santa Fe Trail.

1849—On October 10 of this year there died in St. Louis Pierre Laclede Chouteau, "whose influence, covering a forty-year period, practically controlled the destiny of the Osage nation, in trade, policy, and dealings with the government." But if Pierre Chouteau, Sr. was a powerful force in an Indian nation, he left a son to carry on his work who was an even greater force in the American nation.

For Pierre Chouteau, Jr., became the best business man of the entire dynasty. For 50 years he was an economic power, keeping abreast of the rapidly changing times to hold his place. It was he who foresaw the importance of steam to navigation and transportation on the Missouri.

Pierre served as a member of the Missouri state constitutional convention in 1820. His business operations were extensive and foreseeing. He foresaw the doom of the steamboat and the increasing importance of the railroads. He was one of the original incorporators of the Missouri Pacific railroad in 1849 and also of the Ohio & Mississippi railroad in 1851. In addition to his varied business interests he was a patron of the arts, sciences and literature.

These interests at frequent intervals took him away from St. Louis—to eastern cities, to England and to the Continent. He lived for many years in New York city but at the end he came back to his native city of St. Louis. There he died on September 8, 1865. With his death, the greatness of the Chouteaus began to decline.

Descendants of the Chouteau family are still numerous in the United States. But none of them is as outstanding as old Auguste or Pierre Laclede or Pierre, Jr. But their fame is secure.

The Chouteaus built towns, erected forts and developed new systems of transportation, amassing large fortunes for themselves while serving their government in pushing back the frontier and maintaining peaceful relations with the Indians. They were sharp diplomats, using the arts of diplomacy on red man and white alike. They imprinted their name indelibly upon the history of the West. They were Empire Builders.

Fur traders "cordelling" up the Missouri.

The founding of the Missouri Fur company, which marked the real beginning of the Chouteau family in the epic of the fur trade, was the direct result of a trip made up the Missouri river by an expedition led by a Spanish trader named Manuel Lisa. When Lewis and Clark returned to St. Louis in 1806 from their famous exploring expedition into the West, Lisa talked with them and became inspired by their tales of the riches in furs which could be harvested in that far northwestern country where the Missouri flows close to the Rocky mountains. So in the spring of 1807 he set out for the Indian country with a small party of trappers and traders who spent the winter on the Yellowstone, hunting, trapping and trading with the Crows.

"The following summer found Manuel Lisa back in St. Louis, flushed with the success of his prosperous venture and dreaming of greater things to come," says the chapter on "Traders and Trappers on the Great Plains" in "The Lure of the Frontier" (Yale University Press, "The Pageant of America"). "Excitement ran high among the principal men of that frontier town. Listening to Lisa, one after another decided to join the enterprise which was duly incorporated under the name of the St. Louis Missouri Fur company. On the records appear most of the leading citizens of St. Louis: Manuel Lisa, William Clark, who had helped to blaze the trail across the continent, Pierre Chouteau, Sr., Auguste P. Chouteau, Reuben Lewis, and Sylvester Labadie. To this list other names were added: Pierre

A medal symbolizing loyalty to its interests was issued by the Chouteau Fur company of St. Louis to friendly Indians of the Northwest in 1843. The medal was of silver, 3⅝ inches in diameter, and bore on the obverse side a bust of Pierre Chouteau and the legend, "Pierre Chouteau, Jr. & Co., Upper Missouri Outfit." On the reverse side was a crossed tomahawk and calumet and clasped hands and the wording, "Peace and Friendship."

Menard and William Morrison of Kaskaskia in Illinois, Andrew Henry of Louisiana and Dennis Fitz-Hugh of Louisville, Ky. The Spaniard, Frenchman and Englishman, reflecting in their vary names the history of the Louisiana country, united to exploit the rich fur country of the Upper Missouri."

Early the next year the company sent its first expedition up the river. It consisted of 150 men who took a great quantity of merchandise in their boats to be used in establishing along the river several posts where traders were left in charge. Late in October the main body of the expedition went into winter quarters in the Crow country where they carried on a profitable trade with the Indians and also secured many valuable pelties by trapping for themselves.

In the spring of 1810 a large party headed by Andrew Henry pushed on to the Three Forks of the Missouri, where they planned to establish a post in the heart of the Blackfoot country. But disaster overtook this post for in April a war party of Blackfeet swooped down upon it, when most of the trappers were away, killed the five men who had been left in charge and carried away the horses, guns, ammunition and the packs of furs which they had labored so hard to accumulate. But despite many misfortunes the young company saved the capital it had invested and even made a small profit.

It suffered from other vicissitudes of fortune during the War of 1812 but it managed to survive them, although reorganization after reorganization of the company followed. As the years passed, one by one of the original founders dropped out—all except Manuel Lisa, who had active direction of its operations from the end of the war until his death in 1820. His successor was Joshua Pilcher, a worthy subordinate of the great Spanish trader. In the summer of 1822 more than $25,000 worth of furs were sent down the river.

Eight years later he gave up the business and the career of the Missouri Fur company came to an end. As previously stated, it was succeeded by the firm of P. Chouteau, Jr. and Co., which was destined to enjoy a greater prosperity than the pioneer company had ever known.

That Nagging Backache

May Warn of Disordered Kidney Action

Modern life with its hurry and worry, irregular habits, improper eating and drinking—its risk of exposure and infection—throws heavy strain on the work of the kidneys. They are apt to become over-taxed and fail to filter excess acid and other impurities from the life-giving blood.

You may suffer nagging backache, headache, dizziness, getting up nights, leg pains, swelling—feel constantly tired, nervous, all worn out. Other signs of kidney or bladder disorder may be burning, scanty or too frequent urination.

Use Doan's Pills. Doan's help the kidneys to get rid of excess poisonous body waste. They are antiseptic to the urinary tract and tend to relieve irritation and the pain it causes. Many grateful people recommend Doan's. They have had more than forty years of public approval. Ask your neighbor!

Ink Spots And Spatters

By Jergie

This column has had a rest for a w...ek. more or less peaceful. . . a... a number of readers put up a h...rl and wanted to know what h...ppened to the Ink Spots. It was j... one of those times when ideas f...ted around but failed to mater...ze and so the most convenient ...v out was just to skip the whole ...ing. In other words, the writer c...nfesses a streak of laziness.

And talk about laziness. . . this ...iter don't claim to be lazy. . . j...st haven't ever gotten rested up, s... to speak!

And so, we again tackle the Ink S...ts with ideas still floating a...und and still quite vague as to w...at to write about.

I-S-A-S

And so, a timely subject is G...ound Hog Day. Our calendar does not have February 2nd print...d in red ink along with other na... holidays. Never-the-less ... Hog Day should be a "red ... and maybe what few ... left can do some... ...t.

... ...oppens to be cloudy ...on is saved. But if the hog comes out and sees his ...ow look out for cold weath... Coal dealers are all praying f... plenty of sunshine so they can r... up big coal sales for another s... weeks

One writer suggests that Mr. Ground Hog should be our national bird, instead of the eagle. He says that because the ground hogs spend most of their time in the hole. . . they are thus more representative of this great country. The democrats have pushed us so far in the hole we'll never see daylight again!

I-S-A-S

And, speaking of Democrats. . . at the State House at Des Moines they are very conspicuous. . . by their absence! The boys are still cleaning house down there and they certainly have gone out of the fruit business. By that we mean, there are no more "plums" left and what's more. . . there just won't be any more plums!

I-S-A-S

The annual high school county basketball tournament is being played this week at Garner. This just happens to be one of those years when the run of teams is not the best and the winner can almost be picked in advance. Britt or Garner seem to have it "in the bag" this year, with Corwith as a possible "dark horse" in the running. The Seven Eagles are not quite up to par this year, and so it is very unlikely that the winner will be an Eagle team. . . unless Woden springs a surprise. Garner and Britt are in the upper bracket, so one will be eliminated in the second round. Corwith and Woden are the pick in the lower bracket and one of them will go out in the second round.

We are going to stick our neck out and pick Corwith against Britt for the championship. . . with Britt winning. The consolation game will be between Woden and Garner, with Garner winning.

Now, what's your guess?

I-S-A-S

This fine springlike weather we have been enjoying the past week has gotten us to thinking about. . . lawn mowers. . . fishing tackle. . garden work. . . the first robin. . . house-cleaning. . . . . phooey!

House-cleaning! Funny how the "wimmen" get all stirred up about house-cleaning. We have come to the conclusion that they just do it to aggravate their hubbies! Who wants to beat rugs and mattresses anyway? No man ever thought up that idea. Then it's get out the ladder and take off the storm windows. Put on the screens. Move the piano from here to there. . . it really looks better where it was. . . so move it back again! Then that piece of ground just HAS to be spaded for those early flowers. . . more sense to digging fish worms! Phooey, again on house-cleaning. . . but it's coming just as sure as pie. Phooey again, and more phooey!

I-S-A-S

Here's a story that just floated in on a south breeze. It seems the proprietor of a Ford garage was giving his personal attention to a prospect whom he was trying to sell one of these sleek new Mercury cars. Says the proprietor: "It's absolutely the fastest thing on wheels." "Oh, no," exclaimed the prospective buyer. Says Louie: "What's faster on wheels than a Mercury?" Quoth the prospective buyer: "A Jew going through Germany on a bicycle."

Louie is still up in the air.

A GOOD SAMARITAN

A good Samaritan helps his friends in every way he can. When a person feels let down, and is down and out, there is usually someone who can help him with his problem, and will do so. As the story goes—a certain freshman went to college and fell among critics who said his clothes fitted badly, his manners were awkward, and that he had an unattractive personality. They took away all of his self-confidence, enthusiasm, and courage; departing, they left him hurt, lonely, and half dead. The seniors were amused that the sophomores were doing a good job, as were the juniors. But a certain student, passing by came where he was and when he saw him, was moved with compassion. He bound up his wounds, pouring in sympathy and understanding. He took him to his room, set him on his feet again and bringing him into his own circle, was a friend of his. Who proved to be the neighbor of him that fell among the critics?

If we think of this, we too, can be good Samaritans. If someone is hurt, we can help him by giving our attention to the problem and help take his mind off his worries If someone needs help in working arithmetic problems, it would be okay if someone helped him work a few to help him understand them better.

We could go on and on mentioning good deeds that would make us good Samaritans. Two heads being better than one is exemplified in the case of a barrel.—Doris

AROUND K. H. S. ASSEMBLY

Margie Blumer is still on the sick list, and we juniors want to wish her a satisfactory and speedy recovery.

We Juniors were quite surprised in ourselves this week. We all agreed on the same class ring. We also are getting class pins. They are gold with a "K", half green and half white, in the middle. (Wait until September, Seniors). The pins should be here in about ten days.

The Seniors are going to have their pictures taken on Saturday February 11. This year we have an opportunity that Seniors in previous years have not had. Russells offer a tour of the different places of importance in Mason City, such as Decker's Meat Packing plant and Hamilton's Business College.

You should have seen the Senior girls when they came to school Monday morning. They were all grins and smiles. They could hardly wait until class time so they could start on their new wool dress material, which every girl was showing to another girl friend. After studying cookery and child development it was real fun to start sewing. Even if it was a class, it was something different.

The worst part of it is we had to study alteration of patterns, which took time before we could get started on real sewing.

We are all very anxious to get our garments finished so we can proudly strut around in a dress we made ourself.

The eighth graders from the neighboring rural schools will take their exams February 2nd and 3rd.

BLOW 'EM UP and BUST 'EM NEWS of the WEEK by BARSWICK

Maybe basketball players will have a better show at Garner because there don't seem to be quite so many feminine admirers. This problem seemed to handicap them at Belmond.

Bruce Arnold came to school the other day with a home-made contraption he called a motor. We believed that all right, after we saw it run, but some of the boys are still in doubt about his story, "I made it myself."

Dorothy B. evidently isn't mad at the boys. This was found out when Dorothy was just waking out of a snooze and innocently says, "What a life without a man."

Henry Kaduce is practicing up on those one handed shots from the center at a rapid pace now. The county tournament is this week, you know

A new title was given to a basketball player at Ventura last week. One of the boys came charging from the rear, and went clear over a couple of men. A lady sitting by Coach delightedly exclaimed, "There goes 'Ferdinand the Bull'."

By H. A. Grantham

Opinions expressed herein are those of the writer and should not be construed as reflecting the policy of the Republican State Central Committee, any individual or group, or the newspaper in which this column appears.

PENSIONS

California is usually considered a haven for the older generation. Because so many old age pension plans have originated in that state the myth has grown that there are more persons in California above sixty-five than in any other of the United States The facts are, however, there are more persons in Iowa above sixty-five in proportion to population than in California. Furthermore the proportion in Iowa is fifty per cent above the average for the United States. Many attempts to revise and improve the present Iowa pension law are expected at this session of the legislature and legislators are uncovering some interesting and illuminating information in their study of the pension movement.

MILLION MONTHLY

About 50,000 Iowans are now receiving pensions averaging $19.82 per month The social welfare board estimates there are 210,000 residents of the state past sixty-five. These pensions are costing the state about $5,500,000 annually with another 5,000,000 being furnished by the Federal government. Since a monthly payment of $25 is possible under Iowa law and it is probable the number to qualify will increase steadily, the time is near when a million a month will be paid out under existing statutes. The tendency in Iowa and in all other states is to relax these pension laws but even in the face of sympathetic ideals there are certain inescapable facts that cause legislators to proceed cautiously. The enactment of legislation removing all the present qualifying requirements which would make every person over sixty-five eligible regardless of need even at the modest figure of $25 per month, require an annual outlay of $63,000,000 for pensions and incidental administrative costs.

STATE HOUSE AGING

Appointment of Gray Anderson of Knoxville as State House custodian spotlights a big job that is becoming more difficult as the years pass. Anderson will be in charge of about 55 janitors and caretakers who maintain what is to all practical purposes a twenty-four hour job of cleaning and maintaining the building and its ninety-three acres of grounds. The building was begun in 1871 and completed in 1886 at a cost of $3,296,256. Continuous care by custodial staffs and many programs of minor repairs have failed to beat back the steadily encroaching ravages of time and weather and long, hard use. Illustrious feet have helped wear away the thresholds and the corridors have echoed the voices of men and women who helped make this state great. And, as the old timers will tell you, they had to echo in the days before loud speakers.

THE FUTURE

Not this legislative session; not this administration—perhaps not the next nor yet the next but in the not too distant future a major porgram of repair and renovation will be cnsidered for the Capitol building. Iowa has grown since 1886 and the building long ago outgrew its capacity for caring for the business of an expanding commonwealth; a commonwealth that has progressively added to its requirements and its appetites and its concern for the welfare of its people. New departments and new services spilled out of the original offices into the corridors and hallways as time passed and are now sprawled over the city of Des Moines in old school houses and modern office buildings. Rentals have reached an imposing figure and the business heads of the present administration have begun an examination to see if full value is being received and if the annual outlay might not best be designed mto a permanent investment.

RED BOOK

Whether by design or otherwise the Iowa Official Register or as it is more commonly known, The Red Book, has for the past five or six years given the public less and less detailed information concerning state matters. There was a time when the Red Book told the story of every office and commission; listed its employees, their duties and their salaries. Economy probably prompted the first gesture toward condensation because the Red Book is an expensive piece of printing. However, many are wondering today if the saving made wasn't lost in the thoughtless, sometimes senseless creation of new jobs that attracted no attention because they were not often revealed to the public. However the new Republican administration and the new Republican legislature seem determined to uncover all the truth. Senator A. Claire Dewey (Rep) of Washington has introduced a resolution calling for a complete list of state employees, their salaries from all sources and more particularly the names of those drawing pay from more than one department. Representatives Kuester of Cass and Dykhouse of Lyon, both Republicans, have sponsored a bill which would require the publication in pamphlet form each September of the name, residence, official title and salary of every state employee. This bill is identical to the one vetoed by Gov. Kraschel in 1937.

REVISION DUE

The new Red Book, now in the process of compilation, seems scheduled for much revision. Useless information traditionally present in the past issues will probably be dropped in favor of more pertinent facts. Attempts to continue the Democratic editor of the Red Book failed and Governor Wilson's "open door, flat top desk" policy of administering to state affairs will also be applied to the preparation of The Official Register insofar as space and appropriations will permit. Governor Wilson does not believe the functions of any state department can be hampered by permitting full public view of it.

GOING UP

Total bills introduced in both houses of the legislature will probably pass the three hundred mark this week. As this is written three reorganization bills have been introduced, one of which would combine Board of Parole with the Board of Control to include the Attorney General with the Board of Control to function as the Parole Board; and another disestablishing the Engineering school at the State University. Of most interest to farmers is HF114 setting up a farm-to-market road fund to be composed of (1) fifteen per cent of fees received for motor license fees; (2) not to exceed 25 per cent of counties' share of motor license fees; (3) any funds available from the Federal government for this purpose.

OUT OF THE ORDINARY

Out of the ordinary bills introduced recently include one by Morrissey (Rep) of Jasper to change the date of the primary election from June to September; by Senators Hopkins (Rep) of Guthrie and Breen (Dem) of Ft. Dodge to nominate state officers except governor and lieutenant governor at convention; by Breen to make Commerce Commission, Secretary of Agriculture and Superintendent of Public Instruction appointive; by Senators Harvey of Missouri Valley and Forsling of Sioux City both Republicans, together with Representatives Bulow and Judd (Reps) of Clinton, Reilley (Dem) of Dubuque and Roan (Rep) of Lee, to provide side bay windows on cabooses. The bill to substitute electrocution for hanging in executions introduced by Bowers (Rep) of Union was re-referred to committee.

TAG ENDS

The total number of bills expected to be introduced at this session of the legislature is estimated at 1,100 . . . . no more dummy license plates except those used to disguise police and Bureau of Investigation cars . . . . . .

IF YOU don't believe that "Motion pictures are your best entertainment," but that only really good pictures can come under that heading, you'll be interested (I think) in knowing which ones an expert has selected as the best of the new crop.

The expert is W. G. Van Schmus, managing director of the Radio City Music Hall, in New York. Mr. Van Schmus is on a spot, always. Visitors to New York, as well as natives, troop to his theater. He can't let them go away saying that the show was good but why in the world did he select that picture to go with it!

Ushering in the new year with "Topper Takes a Trip," co-starring Constance Bennett and Roland Young, he picked "There's That Woman Again," (Melvyn Douglas and Virginia Bruce), to follow it. Then "Trade Winds," (Frederic March and Joan Bennett), "The Great man Votes," (John Barrymore, Virginia Weidler), "Gunga Din," (Cary Grant, Victor McLaglen, Douglas Fairbanks Jr.), "Made for Each Other," (co-starring Carole Lombard and James Stewart), "Love Affair," (with Irene Dunne and Charles Boyer), and "Stage Coach" (with Claire Trevor, John Wayen, Andy Devine, John Carradine, and Louise Platt).

Each film is scheduled for a week's run. The theater accommodates an audience of more than 6,000 persons; the picture is shown five times a day. It has to be good, you see!

Franchot Tone bobs up all over New York these days; leaving Hollywood certainly didn't mean leaving the limelight. He is appearing on the stage in a new play, doing a bit of radio work, and recently shared honors with Abe Lyman and Dick Foran as a celebrity at the first of the International Casino's "Sunday Night Informals," dedicated to celebrities.

When J. M. Kerrigan arrived in Hollywood eight years ago he said that he'd stay long enough to play the film role he'd been engaged for and then he'd go back to Ireland. He was then one of the Abbey players. He's still in Hollywood, (a role in "The Great Man Votes" was the most recent bait), and still thinks that, as soon as he can get away, he'll go back to Ireland.

Edward Small is in favor of giving new people a chance in his pictures. It was he who brought Robert Donat to this country to appear in "The Count of Monte Cristo," and recently he made Louis Hayward a star in "The Duke of West Point." His current production, "King of the Turf," starring Adolphe Menjou, it's 15-year-old Roger Daniel who gets the big break. With radio and stage tempting movie stars to use interest in motion picture-making, it's a wise producer who can spot talent and cultivate it—and put it under contract!

By the way, in "The Duke of West Point" you'll see some old-timers—Mary MacLaren, William Bakewell and Kenneth Harlan.

All of the music that Frank R. White, organist on Dr. William L. Stidger's "Getting the Most Out of Life" program, writes for the Stidger hymns must stand up under Mrs. White's "24 hour test." When he writes a new hymn tune Mrs. White plays it twice on the organ. Then if she's able to play it from memory the next day White feels sure that the public will remember the tune without any effort. But does he make allowances for the fact that Mrs. White probably has an unusual memory?

Mothers Shun Back Seat in Modern Life

By PATRICIA LINDSAY

WOMEN who can pride themselves on being modern mothers never find it necessary to take a back seat even though their daughters may be extremely beautiful and talented.

When mothers complain to me that their daughters push them in the background (whether it be in the home or out socially) I take time to write them a long personal letter to help them out of their difficulties. I do, even though perhaps I shouldn't, ask them rather pointed questions—"How did you bring up your daughter?" "What happened to you while she was growing into an adult?" "Do you keep yourself up in appearance?" "Are you a woman your daughter and husband are proud to exhibit?"

Billie Burke has kept her youthful charm and beauty although she is the mother of a grown daughter, also in the movies.

Those are poignant questions. It takes steady nerves for most complaining mothers to answer.

Let us assume that during the time when daughter was growing up, mother had no easy time of it. She had a lot of work to do and money was scarce. She sacrificed a great deal to give daughter nice clothes, a good schooling, and a healthy life. All right. Her mother love dictated. She enjoyed doing that.

Of course she hoped, and rightfully expected, that when daughter did grow up she would be grateful for this loving care. Perhaps daughter, during her difficult teens is, or was not, grateful. Perhaps she had been thoroughly spoiled. Perhaps for years she expected mother to do all she did do because mother never took the trouble to train daughter to be grateful. All that happens.

Important Details To Watch

You and I know that sheer materials are a nuisance for they do not permit the slightest carelessness! Our straps must never be pinned! If we wear more than one strap they must look as one through our blouse. A slip that is the least bit mussed will look untidy, and any slip should not show through the side closing of your dress! Nor should a slip show beneath the hem of your dress. The only way to shorten a too long slip is to hem it over—never, never knot the strap.

Cut out toes in shoes are most comfortable and serve as much needed ventilators for the feet but they are hard on stockings! When you wash your hose be sure to scrub the toes well for how shocking to see a soiled toe peeping out from your shoe!

Speaking about shoes—they must be aired frequently. It is a good idea to shake in the shoe a little deodorant powder once a week and leave it in over night. Before wearing brush it out. That helps to keep your feet fresh.

Here's to more careful grooming!

Character Made Her Beautiful

"When I first looked into Jenny's beautiful eyes," Bill told me, "I knew I had to marry her. She's the most gorgeous creature in the world!"

What Bill had really seen in Jenny's eyes was a person of charm and depth of character. She had made the most of herself. Her grooming was meticulous and she selected her clothes with great care. And she certainly had done a lot with that plain little face which the Creator had given her. But that wasn't all. She had let her grand sense of humor (often an Ugly Duckling's compensation!) carry her through life with colors! She lived happily, kept herself busy and proved to all the ugly ducklings that not being beautiful is no handicap if you face facts. For Jenny got her man, and a mighty nice man at that!

PETER PREACHES AT PENTECOST

LESSON TEXT—Acts 2 12-18, 36-41.
GOLDEN TEXT—Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of hosts.—Zechariah 4 6.

We need a revival. With one accord leaders of the Church agree on that point although they may differ widely on other matters. Social and civic leaders agree. One prominent government official recently said that the only hope for the world in this hour of conflict and confusion was a return to the Christian faith of our fathers. He was but one of many outstanding men who have expressed such a belief.

How may such a revival of faith toward God (with its quickening of the believer and the resultant salvation of sinners) be brought about? Certainly it is not in the power of man to produce it, although he does have a vital part in surrendering himself to God's plan and purpose so that He may work again in the midst of His people. Our lesson for today clearly indicates how God worked on Pentecost, namely, through a Spirit-filled people, proclaiming His own Word, with astonishing results following. Will not God work in the same way today if we only give Him a chance?

I. An Amazing Spiritual Experience (vv. 12, 13).

Read the first 11 verses of this chapter and you will learn of the coming of the Holy Spirit upon the disciples—as the rushing of a mighty wind, in tongues of fire, and in the ability to proclaim the Word of God to all men.

There is no use talking about another Pentecost as though God needs to repeat that marvelous day. But the essence of what occurred on Pentecost is the deep need of both individual Christians and of the Church today. In much (one is almost ready to say most) of our Christian work there is not only a failure to recognize the Holy Spirit, but what appears to be an actual ignoring of Him. One of the great experiences of literally thousands of students who have come under the writer's care during the years is their sudden understanding of the fact that the Holy Spirit is a person—yes, a convicting, regenerating, directing, and energizing member of the divine Trinity, working in and through man.

II. An Effective Spiritual Message (vv. 14-18, 36. See also vv. 19-35).

The characteristics of a real gospel message are found here. First of all there must be a Spirit-filled preacher. He may be a minister or he may be a layman, but if the Spirit of God is upon him, there will be the right kind of message.

That message will not be an essay, book review, or dissertation on social or civic problems, but an exposition of the Word of God. Note that Peter preached and interpreted prophecy — a subject which no preacher should neglect—but that he did so not for the purpose of having a sensational sermon subject, but in order to reveal the glories of the person and work of Christ—a lesson some preachers need to learn.

The manner of preaching is also important. Peter was definite, earnest, bold, and decidedly personal in his preaching. A man who is speaking in the energy of the flesh should beware of such marks upon his preaching, but a Spirit-filled man should rejoice in the holy boldness and assurance which the Holy Spirit gives He will be delivered from any temptations to be extreme or unkind, but will at the same time be led to say those things which will prick the hearts of people and cause them to turn to Christ.

III. An Appropriate Spiritual Result (vv 37-41).

We often say that there is very little old-time conviction of sin today, and alas, it is all too true. It is not even the privilege of many spiritually-minded preachers who present a true gospel to see such a response as Peter saw on Pentecost. But that does not mean that the Spirit is not working.

God does not hold us responsible for outward evidence of results. He does hold every teacher and preacher responsible for faithful discharge of his sacred stewardship. That includes more than the public ministry of teaching a Sunday School class or preaching a sermon. It means that the individual's life is right with God—no trickery, no dishonesty, no double dealing with God or man; a life yielded to the control of the Holy Spirit Next comes diligence in study of God's Word, and a willingness to proclaim its whole truth without fear or favor, in season and out of season.

The Living Word

Christ is the Living Word; so it is the Word of God that has come from God, and has come into this world, and by which all and every operation of God is effected. Where the Word of God is received the soul is begotten of God.

HOW TO SEW

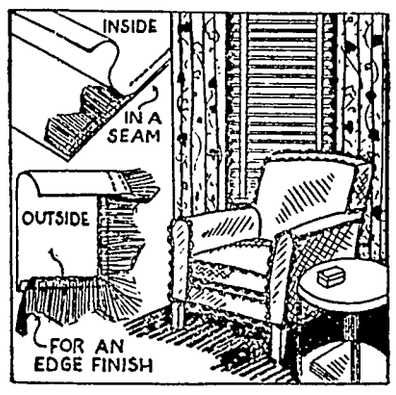
by Ruth Wyeth Spears



"DEAR MRS. SPEARS: With the help of Book 1, I have just made a slip cover for a wing chair. I never would have tried it if your directions had not been so clear. I am now planning another slip cover and draperies which I would like to trim in fringe. Will you please show me with a sketch how I should sew the fringe? Also should the draperies and chair match?—M. J. N."

This reader evidently agrees with the Chinese proverb, "One picture is worth a thousand words." So here are the sketches showing how to apply fringe in the seams of slip covers and also for an edge finish. The raw edge of the material in the lower sketch is turned to the right side and fringe is stitched over it.

If figured draperies are used, the best effect is obtained if not more than one slip cover in the room is of figured material. Plain slip covers may match one or more of the colors in draperies, rug or wall paper.

NOTE: Now is the time to give your house a fresh start. Crisp new curtains; a bright slip cover; a new lampshade; or ottoman will do the trick. Make these things yourself. Mrs. Spears' Book 1—SEWING, for the Home Decorator, shows you how with step by step, easy to follow sketches. Book 2—Gifts, Novelties and Embroidery, will give you a new interest for long winter evenings. It contains complete directions for making many useful things. Books are 25 cents each; if you order both books, Patchwork Quilt Leaflet is included free; it contains 36 authentic stitches illustrated in detail. Address: Mrs. Spears, 210 S. Desplaines St., Chicago, Ill.

Safe Winter Driving

Safe counsel for bad driving weather, according to police officials and safety engineers, is "when in doubt, use tire chains."

This warning was issued with winter driving conditions prevailing, following a recent revelation by the National Safety council which said: "One fifth of all the people killed in traffic accidents in the United States throughout the entire year die in November and December alone!" Police assert there is even a greater percentage of personal injuries and property damages directly traceable to snow and ice.

Because of the conceded safety advantage of tire chains on snow or ice, police and safety engineers this year are urging their use when necessary in the interest of public safety, and because they provide the most positive anti-skid and traction yet developed.

The contest board of the American Automobile association, in official test No. 3143, conclusively proved the greater margin of safety and stopping ability provided by tire chains. Vividly illustrating their imperative necessity on snow or ice, the AAA test showed that chains, on rear wheels only, stopped a car in 45.8 per cent less distance than when no chains were used, and in 66.8 per cent less distance where chains were used on all four wheels.

Hard Work

In every line of activity nine-tenths of the prescription for success consists of plain, everyday, honest hard work.

No amount of talent will free a man from the necessity for hard work. You can have as much success as you like, but you've got to be willing to pay its price in the only coin that passes current in the market where success is sold—hard work.

Hard work alone will accomplish remarkable results. But hard work with method and system will perform seeming miracles.

Heat at Arctic Circle

The Yukon river mining camp at Circle, Alaska, is but half a degree below the Arctic circle and its winter temperatures run to 70 and 50 degrees below zero, but its householders stay warm as toast. Circle hot springs is the answer. Virtually every structure in the town is being heated by natural hot water.

New Type Of Grain Is Named After Our County By Experts

HANCOCK IS TOP OATS IN STRAW STURDINESS

Should Be Ideal Nurse Crop For Sweet Clover When Oats Are To Be Combined

To raise an oat that can withstand the rigors of lashing winds and beating of rains without "going down flatter than a buckwheat cake" has been the dream of the plant breeder and grain producer for years on end

Bringing this "air castle" down to earth—that of breeding an oat with a lodging-resistant stem—has been accomplished by F. A. Coffman, H C Murphy and others from the Bureau of Plant Industry of the United States Department of Agriculture, and L. C. Burnett, Iowa State College Agronomist.

Tall Sturdy Stem

This new strong-stemmed strain developed at the Experiment Station and recently named Hancock, is reported by Burnett to have "the strongest and most lodging-resistant stem" of any oat "they have seen or heard of."

Because of its reasonably early maturity and its tall, sturdy straw, Hancock should be welcomed by farmers who plant oats as a nurse crop with sweet clover and harvest the grain with a combine.

Ideal For Combine

The varieties now in use as nurse crops usually do not grow tall enough to allow the combine to clip off the ripened oat head and at the same time miss the top of the green clover

Hancock is highly resistant to stem rust and smut and has sufficient resistance to leaf rust to protect it from most attacks of the disease without serious damage. Yields are only slightly higher than those of the two popular Iowa varieties, Iogold and Iowa No 105.

Hancock will be released from the college in time for the spring sowing in 1940.

YOUNG ANGLER TURNS IN SEASON CATCH RECORDS

Many of Iowa's fishermen have turned in creel census data on the blanks provided on the back of last year's fishing regulations, but one of the most interesting of these reports was received recently from a youngster at Clear Lake. Seven year old Dick Peterson turned in a record revealing a seasonal catch of 12 crappie, 6 perch and 3 silver bass.

C. F. Merten Gives Report On Road Projects Of The Past Year

ROAD CONSTRUCTION AND MAINTENANCE SUMMARIZ- BY COUNTY ENGINEER

Many Improvements Made On Rural Roads In County In 1938

During the year we graded 35 miles of local roads at an average cost of $701.64 per mile. This cost includes all labor and material for clearing the right of way, grading the road, and placing corrugated pipe culverts except a small amount of labor furnished by WPA. The work was carried on under difficulties because of the wet weather but with a few exceptions good results were secured.

During the year 58 miles of local roads were graveled at a cost of $306.92 per mile, including purchase of gravel and hauling The gravel was shoveled into trucks by WPA labor. The practice of loading gravel by hand without crushing and screening equipment has resulted in leaving a large number of rocks on the road. The county is purchasing a rock crusher which will be taken out on these gravel roads to crush this oversize material.

One wooden bridge was built on the trunk road at a cost of $2626 40. This is the bridge over the Iowa River east of Goodell and it is wider and stronger than the wooden bridges built on local roads It has a twenty foot roadway and a floor thickness of 4 inches. Eight wooden bridges were built on local roads at an average cost of $836.71 each. These bridges have a 16 foot roadway and a 3 inch floor which is considered ample for the traffic carried by local roads.

The county received enough gasoline tax money in 1938 to pay all the above construction costs.

The cost of maintaining the secondary roads of Hancock County in 1938 was $99,969.31 all of which was raised by local taxation Some of the principal items of expense were as follows:

|---|---|
| Labor | $29,017.08 |
| New equipment | 26,350.00 |
| Gasoline | 10,922.62 |
| Repairs & tools | 9,700.00 |
| Shop at Britt | 6,400.00 |
| Oil & grease | 2,589.84 |

The county owns 9 power maintainers, 12 trucks, 6 tractors, and a large number of graders, scrapers, and other road tools Our shop at Britt which was constructed in 1938 is one of the best of its kind and is well equipped to repair all county equipment.

The condition of the secondary roads in Hancock County was as follows on January 1, 1939:

|---|---|
| Paved | 5 miles |
| Graveled | 730 miles |
| Dirt | 250 miles |

Weekly News Analysis

U. S. May Force Orient Peace Through Guam Defense Gossip

By Joseph W. La Bine

EDITOR'S NOTE—When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of the news analyst, and not necessarily of the newspaper.

Asia

On December 31, January 14 and January 19, respectively, the U. S., Britain and France warned Japan that they disliked her violation of China's "open door." Nothing happened. So painful was the silence that China's Foreign Minister Wang Chung-Hui finally suggested that democracies might be using the wrong tactics His proposal: To follow these strong diplomatic notes with formal proposals of settlement, even unto actual terms.

What Foreign Minister Wang forgot is that neither the U. S. nor France nor Britain yet feels obligated to beg for peace with Tokyo. But if Japan would make the overture—. And that is precisely what the U. S. state department now seems bent on making Japan do.

As the crow flies, Guam lies 1,500 miles southeast of Tokyo. This 150-square-mile tract has belonged to the U. S. since 1898, lately becoming a potentially important base for Pacific commercial aviation. But since Japan began flashing her fangs Guam has become even more important as an outpost to protect America's back door. The need for such an outpost is illustrated by Japan's illegal fortification of nearby, mandated Caroline and Marianne islands.

THE ISLAND OF GUAM

Official Washington thinks Japan is using outlaw tactics in her Chinese invasion, her illegal fortifications and—of less importance to the U. S.—by threatening to fish Russian waters whether Moscow approves or not When President Roosevelt's $552,000,000 emergency defense program reached congress, an item of $44,000,000 was listed for naval air and submarine bases. Now this has been boosted to $65,000,000, and $5,000,000 of the sum would be authorized at Guam for deepening the harbor, making landing fields and enlarging marine barracks.

This drew from Japan exactly the protest Washington expected and wanted. When Tokyo objected that Guam's fortification would be an aggressive move, the White House commented that Columnist Walter Lippmann's remarks just about fitted the picture: "Congress should authorize the fortification of Guam, and then the state department should invite the Japanese to discuss the question under Article XIX of the Washington treaty (nine-power pact guaranteeing China's open door). In this discussion we could say to the Japanese if they do not wish Guam to be fortified they might return to the treaty by dismantling fortifications in the mandated islands."

President Roosevelt has remained free of the controversy by pointing out that congressional authorization for rearmament is one thing, but that authorization is worthless without appropriations.

Meanwhile the game of democracy vs. dictator became still more bitter as Japan at once tightened her belt and stuck out her tongue. As the diet opened its new session in Tokyo, Premier Kiichiro Hiranuma announced (1) that wartime control measures would be placed on a permanent basis and (2) that Japan has no alternative other than to "exterminate those who fail to understand" her aim in China.

Trend

TELEVISION—British Broadcasting corporation, celebrating the second anniversary of television, announces 10,000 picture receivers are now being used in England.

MONEY—Idle credit resources of federal reserve bank members have reached an all-time record high of $3,560,000,000.

DROUTH — The Southwest's "dust bowl" is in its best condition since 1932 with 13,752,118 acres planted to cover crops and only 2,664,000 acres expected to be subject to wind erosion this year.

CONVENT—Henceforth government troops may be billetted in the premises of Austrian convents.

ARMY—Current increases in the U. S. army will boost the nation from tenth to eighth ranking in world military forces.

Said Foreign Minister Hachiro Arita: "What Japan desires is the creation of a new order which is to secure the permanent peace of east Asia, that is to say, the construction of a new east Asia upon an ethical foundation wherein Japan, Manchukuo and China, while each preserving her independence and individuality, will stand united and linked together for active collaboration and mutual aid . . ."

Germany

Dr. Hjalmar Horace Greeley Schacht gained a good world name by rescuing the German mark during post-war inflation. He has headed the Reichsbank ever since, switching over to Nazidom despite its unorthodox policies of self-sufficiency which are diametrically opposed to recognized economic and political principles. Though Germany's finances have suffered through foreign trade losses, Doctor Schacht was miraculously able to restore a measure of economic prosperity.

But this has been a personal victory, won not through Nazi merits but through Schacht friendship Because he held such a good name, Doctor Schacht was able to travel in select foreign circles where Nazis Hitler, Goering and Goebbels would not be accepted. Result. He wangled many a foreign trade concession, especially from England. The belief that he may have been wolfish despite his sheep's clothing is further illustrated by the Schacht plan for disposing of German Jews, whereby democracies would agree to stimulate consumption of Nazi exports.

But Doctor Schacht has been summarily dismissed as Reichsbank president, a sudden coup which observers can interpret in either of two ways:

Pro-Schacht. Because of the unique confidence foreigners place in Doctor Schacht, Reichsfuehrer Hitler may believe him more useful as an international salesman than a banker. Since he is to remain in the cabinet (without portfolio) there are rumors he will attempt to peddle

GERMANY'S WALTHER FUNK
Will Dr. Schacht become a salesman?

Jews and exports abroad, meanwhile speeding up the return of warlost German colonies.

Anti-Schacht. His successor to the bank presidency is Dr. Walther Funk, economics minister who champions the Reich's barter trade principle. This theory differs as night and day from U. S. Secretary of State Cordell Hull's reciprocal trade system, and Doctor Funk's appointment indicates Germany will continue to expand her foreign trade along unorthodox barter lines.

But an even greater fear of German bondholders is inflation. Long a foe of excessive borrowing, Doctor Schacht saw his financial suggestions abandoned time and again last year as the Austrian anschluss, Czech crisis and Sudeten acquisition drew Germany deeper into the red. That inflation is coming may be indicated by the fact that 1938 saw currency circulation rise 20 per cent, bank clearings 50 per cent and bank deposits, 15 per cent.

Medicine

Until the New Deal, socialized medicine received little publicity. Last spring President Roosevelt appointed an inter-departmental committee to investigate health programs, this group subsequently clashing with the American Medical association and bringing to a head monopoly charges now pending against the association. Predictions are that the U. S. will inaugurate its comprehensive public health program before the justice department gets around to hearing A. M. A.'s case, thereby lessening the value of this proceeding. The prediction is bearing fruit in President Roosevelt's long range health program just presented to congress.

The program: Beginning immediately, federal-state expenditures would be increased to $350,000,000 annually by 1949. Funds would go generally to help poor people receive medical and hospital care to establish clinics, encourage vaccinations, develop maternal and child welfare clinics and stimulate disease-control measures

Treasury

In 1934 congress gave President Roosevelt two broad monetary powers. Under one he could reduce the dollar's gold content by 50 per cent, though since 1934 the rate has been 59.06 per cent. Under the other power the President created a currency stabilization fund with increment accruing from the government's revaluation of gold holdings. Originally estimated at $2,000,000,000, the fund is used to protect the dollar's value on international exchange, preventing undue fluctuations.

Both powers expire June 30 and the White House has already asked that they be renewed until the current presidential term expires January 15, 1941. Although lawmakers consider neither grant dangerous, the mere fact that gold devaluation and the stabilization fund are "powers" is enough to make this year's fiery-eyed congress balk.

Biggest opposition will grow out of the treasury's refusal to divulge even the size of the stabilization fund, the two-billion-dollar figure being only a guess. Though softened by well-substantiated reports that the government made about $6,000,000 profit on the fund last year, Michigan's Sen. Arthur Vandenburg is expected to demand a full public accounting before voting to continue the President's power.

Taxation

Two former U. S. treasury secretaries, Andrew W. Mellon and Ogden L. Mills, condemned the inequity of tax exempt federal, state and local bonds. Since his "soak-the-rich" revenue proposal of 1935, President Roosevelt has fought tax exempt securities and one other unpopular exemption, that on federal, state and local employees' salaries. If these exemptions could be abolished the U. S. government figures it would net eventually $300,000,000 annually from government securities, plus $16,000,000 from employees' income taxes.

One day before the President offered this program to congress in a special message, he sent Treasury Undersecretary John W. Hanes to pave the way before a special senate committee. Said Mr. Hanes: "The time for action has come."

The Constitution's Sixteenth amendment gives congress power to "lay and collect taxes on incomes from whatever source derived," therefore the administration thinks statutory enactment rather than constitutional amendment will suffice. Later, after congress has spoken, the courts can decide whether its action is constitutional. Argued Mr. Hanes:

Tax exempt securities now permit many large-income persons to escape income taxes entirely, therefore they are unfair. The $65,000,000,000 in tax exempt securities now outstanding (of which some $50,000,000,000 would be taxable) is so formidable that it discourages investment in private enterprises involving risk. Thus industry cannot compete. As for income tax exemptions, the U. S. Supreme court has already set a precedent by ruling that salaries of such quazi-public agencies as the Port of New York authority are subject to federal taxation.

As might be expected, state and local groups jumped into the fight overnight. Argued the Conference of State Defense: Tax yield would not approach the immediate treasury estimate of $70,000,000 a year. Moreover it would work hardship on states and municipalities by increasing financing costs. The statutory procedure would be unconstitutional. Most important, once congress' power to tax income of state and local securities has been established, a situation could arise in which congress would attempt to tax state revenues. Argued the U. S. Conference of Mayors, in a similar vein: Federal and state governments may recoup from income taxes the higher costs to municipalities in interest on their bonds.

Observers thought income tax exemption could be repealed easily, but were less confident about tax exempt securities

Plain Face Is Challenge to Personality

By PATRICIA LINDSAY

"I CAN'T understand it," wailed a stupid mother to me, "Jenny is so plain and her two sisters are so beautiful! I only hope some man will see something in her and marry her. I'll have no trouble getting the other two married but Jenny is going to be a problem!"

Jenny heard her mother and she just laughed. "It's too bad I am so plain," she said, "and if no man will marry me when I grow up I'll be a nurse!" Jenny was 15 then.

Five years later I saw Jenny again. Her mother had written that Jenny was to be married and her two pretty sisters (still not married!) were to attend her. I was amazed at this turn of events.

When I stepped off the train there was Jenny with frank lovely eyes smiling me a welcome. Her rather angular figure was becomingly attired in a simply cut sports frock and her long straight black hair had been cut and waved. Now short curls haloed her plain face giving it the most fascinating piquant expression.

From that first moment it was fun to be with Jenny, to listen to her wedding plans, to meet her young friends and to watch her easy, delightful poise. "The Ugly Duckling's certainly made good," I murmured, and was curious to know what she had done during those five intervening years.

It seems that at an early age Jenny realized that beaux and parties and indulgence of whims were not going to be hers easily, because she lacked the beauty her sisters had, so she struck out for a life of her own and went to college. There she concentrated on school affairs as ardently as on her studies and soon won an enviable place in the hearts of her classmates. Not expecting much from life without effort she matured into an unselfish, thoughtful person and through study, quite unconsciously developed her personality. It was at a school dance that Bill, her-groom-to-be, met her.

State of Mind Important

No, the girl over 30 who has let herself down must pick herself up. Perhaps she has to begin with thinking. She must think she is needed, that she is good at her work, that there is a job for her some place. Then she must make herself just as lovely looking as she possibly can within her means.

Any girl can exercise herself back to health, put color in her cheeks and a sparkle in her eyes. She can pamper her hair by brushing, shampooing it at home, drying it in the sun. She can keep her clothes clean, neatly mended and, if her funds are very low, rely on an inexpensive collar and cuffs to freshen the one dress she wears job-hunting.

She must approach each prospective employer with a feeling of assurance, an eagerness for the job and make him feel she is capable, experienced and a person he needs to have around. It can be done—you older girls—but if you don't take yourselves in hand your future is not rosy. Just think of the thousands of girls over 30 who are holding down jobs—how do you suppose they do it?

HINT-OF-THE-DAY

The Use of Face Powder

Face powder is perhaps woman's oldest beauty aid. In Egypt, China and Japan powders have been used for centuries. Rice, starch, clay, bismuth and almond meal were toilet prerequisites before the days of Cleopatra.

A high grade powder is a many-sided blessing. It protects the skin against strong sunlight, harsh winds and atmospheric dust.

The woman who knows her beauty rules never grinds powder into the pores. She pats it on lightly, starting under the chin and not on the nose, as was the old-time custom. After its application she taps her face lightly with the finger tips. That tends to make the powder stick.

It's important to be fastidious about the powder pad, since germs lurk on even a clean skin. Absorbent cotton is more sanitary, though it doesn't spread the powder as nicely as lamb's wool. Rouge pads are frowned upon because they are usually given such long service.

Many of today's powders contain starch talcum, also oxide of zinc, which is an excellent antiseptic. To help powders to hold on lotions are used, some being compounded of stearate of zinc and a bland oil. They should be rubbed into the flesh until they disappear, as you would with a vanishing cream.

Silken Caracul Is Valuable

The value of the silken pelts of caracul from an unusual breed of sheep in southern Russia is determined by the regularity and beauty of their lustrous moire markings As in all furs, the quality of the skin is important, and the supple softness. But for caracul to achieve its greatest loveliness, the shimmering moire patterns must be carefully matched and harmonized

By LEMUEL F. PARTON

NEW YORK.—Mrs. Ella A. Boole, the iron chancellor of prohibition, goes into action again, with Sen. Morris Sheppard of Texas and several other famous old-time dry leaders who think they see a new and arid day dawning. A friend of this writer, scouting material for a magazine article on a trip through the Middle West, says the drys are coming back like an army with banners. Too many saloons, too much coeducational elbow-bending, too many tangles between barleycorn and automobiles, too much cutting of corners to meet heavy tax and license costs—all this, and more, is rallying the drys for a return engagement, say the above and other detached observers.

Mrs. E. A. Boole Girds Sword in Dry Comeback

The massive and deliberate Mrs. Boole is 80 years old and looks much less. In New York, she addresses the luncheon of the state W. C. T. U., commemorating the centenary of the birth of Frances E. Willard, founder of the W. C. T. U. Her firmly set spectacles with gold bows, her crown of abundant white hair, the stern godliness of her features all are as they were. Nothing whatever has been repealed in Mrs. Boole's person or ideas.

For more than 50 years she has been fighting alcohol. With her husband, the late William H. Boole, pastor of the Willett Street Methodist church, she waged war against the Bowery dives, away back in the eighties. She had come from Wooster, Ohio, an alumna of the University of Wooster, where, immediately after her graduation, she had taken up her life-work for prohibition. From 1909 until 1919, there was no important piece of anti-liquor legislation in which she did not participate.

In 1925, she became national president of the W. C. T. U., and, in 1931, world chairman. During the prohibition years and in the preceding years of strife, she was the head of the combined prohibition board of strategy, shrewd, resourceful, tireless. Fittingly, her citadel is still a little Van Wert, Ohio, hedge-bordered house, set down in Brooklyn, holding its middle-western ground far in the enemy territory. As does Mrs. Boole, still standing firm and unshaken in her flat-heeled shoes.

IN THE last 14 years, Dr. Donald A. Laird of Colgate university has written 14 books and 500 articles, but has inspired many more than that. He has been heaven's blessing to the make-up man, needing a snappy little box to dress a page. As Dr. Laird retires, to engage in research at the callow age of 41, here are just a few of his stimulating findings:

Novel Ideas of Dr. Laird Rate Display

Horizontal thinking is best. It is quite possible that a new stage of evolution is setting in which will take us back to all-fours.

When you feel jittery, snap up some red meat.

Some cases of second sight are explained by an odorless scent which almost, but not quite, wells up into consciousness.

If you feel rotten today, you will be happy in just 28 days, as that is the life-ordained cycle of hope and despair.

The Dionne quints are in danger of growing up to be man-haters—on account of women nurses and governesses.

Brains are sluggish in summertime.

Eat candy to fight off sleepiness at work.

Never count sheep to put yourself to sleep. It doesn't work.

Noise makes city people smaller than country people.

Women employees are more adaptable than men and stay longer on the job.

Many of these discoveries have been made by Dr. Laird in his research as a consultant for concerns in heavy industries, in which field he has been busy and distinguished. He is a world authority on noise and sleep. Farm-reared in Indiana, he was educated at the Universities of Dubuque and Iowa and taught at many universities before joining the Colgate faculty 14 years ago. He has been out in front in the above novel ideas, with the exception of the one about our getting back to all-fours. That has been evident for at least seven years, as revealed by prevailing trends in world politics.

"Happy Birthday" Had But Little Meaning for Man Whom Americans Honor on February 12 Each Year

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

© Western Newspaper Union.

ON FEBRUARY 12 Americans everywhere will join in celebrating an event which took place 130 years ago—the birth of Abraham Lincoln. On that day they will recall many a familiar story about the man whose career began in a little log cabin in Hardin county, Kentucky, on February 12, 1809. But the chances are that the majority of them will remember him best as the "Man of Sorrows" who was Chief Executive of their nation during one of the most critical periods in its history—the Civil war years of 1861-65.

Such being the case, it seems appropriate to inquire "How was this date, which is now a red letter day on America's calendar, celebrated during that period? Was there any general observance of the President's birthday and was February 12 ever a 'happy birthday' for Abraham Lincoln during those years?"

It is doubtful if February 12, 1861, was a "happy birthday" for him, for on that date he was en route to Washington to take up his duties as President of the United States of America. Perhaps "the Disunited States" would be a more accurate designation.

Confederacy Organized.

For, six weeks after his election South Carolina had passed its ordinance of secession. During the next month Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana and Florida had followed the Palmetto state's lead. On February 4 representatives from these states had met at Montgomery, Ala., and organized the "Confederate States of America."

Five more, Texas, North Carolina, Virginia, Tennessee and Arkansas, were almost certain to join the six that had already departed from the Union. The future course of three "border states," Maryland, Kentucky and Missouri, as well as the northern slave state of Delaware, was doubtful. And always in the background loomed the threat of a fratricidal war between the North and the South.

Ever since his election his mail had been filled with threatening letters and by the time he reached Philadelphia Allen Pinkerton's secret service men had uncovered such indisputable evidence of a plot to assassinate the President-elect that unusual precautions were taken to safeguard his entrance into the national capital. As a result, the story was spread by his enemies that "the Prince of Rails sneaked into Washington like a thief in the night." Never before nor since has a President-elect entered the capital under such circumstances.

But if February 12, 1861, was a day of anxiety for Abraham Lincoln, February 12, 1862, was even farther from being a "happy birthday" for him. He had failed to avert a war and in the first test of arms with the Confederacy the Union forces suffered a disastrous defeat at the Battle of Bull Run. At the Battle of Ball's Bluff, he lost one of his oldest and dearest friends, Col. E. D. Baker, after whom Lincoln had named the son who was buried in Springfield.

The "Trent Affair" almost involved the nation in a war with England and a scandal in the administration of the war department made it necessary for him to permit Simon Cameron, secretary of war, to retire from his cabinet. His appointment of Gen. George B. McClellan as commander of the Army of the Potomac had proved a disappointment, because "Little Mac" refused to move against the enemy.

This photograph of Lincoln was made by Mathew B. Brady, the great Civil war photographer, on February 27, 1860, and Lincoln often said that this picture and his speech at Cooper Union in New York city had made him President. In it the people of the North saw a sad, wise, determined man who would do nothing rash and yet would defend their Union.

"While harassed by this inaction and obstinacy of McClellan, Mr. Lincoln was plunged into a bitter private sorrow," writes Ida M. Tarbell in her "Life of Lincoln." "Early in February his two younger boys, Willie and Tad, as they were familiarly known, fell sick . . . When he saw them suffering and when it became evident, as it finally did, that Willie, the elder of the two, would die, the President's anguish was intense. He would slip away from visitors and cabinet at every opportunity, to go to the sick room, and during the last four or five days of Willie's life, when the child was suffering terribly and lay in an unbroken delirium, Mr. Lincoln shared with the nurse the nightly vigils at the bedside. When Willie finally died, on February 20, the President was so prostrated that it was feared by many of his friends that he would succumb entirely to his grief. Many public duties he undoubtedly did neglect. Indeed, a month after Willie's death, we find him apologizing for delay to answer a letter because of a 'domestic affliction.'"

It is probable that February 12, 1863, came nearer being a "happy birthday" for Abraham Lincoln than the two previous ones had been. The victories of Grant in the West and Farragut's capture of New Orleans were partial compensation for the disasters in the East—the failure of McClellan's Peninsula campaign, Pope's defeats at the second Battle of Bull Run and the horror of Fredericksburg. The failure of Lee's invasion of Maryland and the result of the Battle of Antietam had made it possible for Lincoln to issue his Emancipation Proclamation. Although for a time this proclamation seemed to have a bad effect on public opinion in the North, it gave the war a new meaning and forecast the eventual defeat of the Confederacy.

The Tide Turns.

Early in 1863 it became apparent that the tide of success had turned strongly in favor of the Union and this fact probably made Lincoln's birthday in this year a happier event than it had previously been. Incidentally this year marked the first celebration of Lincoln's birthday of which there is any record. It is contained in the reminiscences of William H. Tisdale, written a few years before his death in 1930 He says:

"The first birthday anniversary of Abraham Lincoln I remember occurred February 12, 1863. At that time I was on duty at the White House, and had been for some six months previous, as the President's orderly—as confidential messenger or dispatch bearer.

"There was no country-wide observance. In the early evening a small company assembled for his birthday party, a few especially close to him, and a few women friends of Mrs. Lincoln. His son, Robert, a young army officer, arrived, and all sat down to a quiet but happy dinner.

"Just before the birthday feast began one of the Negro boys came to me with eyes wide with astonishment, urging me to see what was being taken to the President. And following him I saw a turkey—a monstrous big bird. Some admirer in Pennsylvania had sent it."

February 12, 1864, found another year of sadness added to the life of Abraham Lincoln. True, the high tide of the Confederacy had ebbed from the shell-torn slopes of Gettysburg and, with the surrender of Vicksburg, "the Father of Waters rolled unvexed to the sea." But in the East there was still a stalemate, successive calls for volunteers had failed to provide enough men to continue the struggle and the Federal government was forced to resort to the draft, which resulted in the bloody "draft riots" in New York city. Nor were these military problems the only ones that added to the burdens of Abraham Lincoln.

Not only was there dissatisfaction in the North with his conduct of the war, but there was dissension in the party which had elected him and it was no secret that men high in the councils of the party were making plans to defeat him for renomination. First they approached Hannibal P. Hamlin, the vice president, to be their candidate but he refused. But Salmon P. Chase, his secretary of the treasury, was not an unwilling listener for he had been Lincoln's rival in 1860. All through the winter of 1863-64 Chase carried on a voluminous correspondence in the interests of his candidacy and no doubt the possibility that Lincoln might be repudiated by his party before his work of saving the Union was finished and the task entrusted to a lesser man overshadowed his birthday in this year.

Chase Resigns.

However, his birthday was scarcely past when a too zealous supporter of Chase issued a circular calling upon the country to organize in the secretary's behalf. Chase was placed in such an embarrassing position that he felt called upon to resign from the cabinet and when the legislature of his state demanded in the name of the people and the soldiers of Ohio that Lincoln be renominated, the Chase boom collapsed. Another such boom, which resulted in a convention at Cleveland that nominated Gen. John C. Fremont, had little better success. So when the Republican convention met, it was a foregone conclusion that Lincoln would be renominated.

That did not mean, however, that he would necessarily be reelected. For the Democrats nominated Gen. George B. McClellan, declared the war a failure, and denounced various acts of the President as "usurpation of extraordinary and dangerous powers not granted by the Constitution" and demanded that "immediate efforts be made for a cessation of hostilities with a view to an ultimate convention of all the States, or other peaceable means, to the end that at the earliest practicable moment peace may be restored on the basis of the Federal union of the states."

McClellan turned out to be an unexpectedly strong candidate, partly because he repudiated the Democratic platform by announcing himself in favor of peace, but only on terms that would preserve the Union. For a time the issue hung in the balance. Then Sherman's capture of Atlanta proved that the war was not a failure and had much to do with turning the tide in favor of Lincoln, who won by a large electoral majority.

By February 12, 1865, it was clearly apparent that the end of the war was in sight so it was probably the happiest birthday that Lincoln had known during his four years in the White House. We do not know whether there was any celebration of the day in the Executive Mansion, as there was in 1863, but we do know that there was a "birthday gift" given on that day, even though Lincoln was the giver rather than the receiver of it.

In the files of the war department are preserved, among many such telegrams, orders and notes from Lincoln, one which was signed on February 12, 1865. It is addressed to Major-General Hooker at Cincinnati and reads: "Is it Lieut. Samuel B. Davis whose death sentence is commuted? If not done, let it be done. Is there not an associate of his also in trouble? Please answer."

Benson Lossing

The charge that Lincoln "stole into Washington" is refuted by the words of the noted historian, Benson J. Lossing, who, incidentally, was born on "Lincoln's Birthday" in 1813. Lossing interviewed Lincoln in 1864 and in his diary, under the date of December 4, says:

"I called on President Lincoln with Congressman I. N. Arnold of Ill. at 9:30. Met him in the Cabinet Council Room alone. He endorsed on the Permit of the War Department, his recommendation of me, to the courtesies of all public offices in the Service. At my request he gave me an account of his journey through Baltimore to Washington, as follows:

Arrived in Philadelphia.

"I arrived at Philadelphia. Agreed to stop over night, and on the following day hoist the flag over Independence Hall. In the evening there was a great crowd, and I received my friends. I received a message from Mr. Judd of Chicago, a warm personal friend, asking me to come to his room. I went, and found there only Mr. Judd and Mr. Pinkerton, the latter a detective whom I had seen in Chicago. He had been employed for some days in watching or searching for suspicious or expected suspicious movements in Baltimore, in connection with my passage through, the time of which was known from public announcement.

"Pinkerton informed me that a plan was prepared for my assassination. He knew of the plan, but was not sure the conspirators would have pluck enough to execute it. He wanted me to go with him right through to Washington that night. I didn't like that. I had made engagements to visit Harrisburgh, and go from there to Baltimore, and I wished to do so. I made arrangements, however, with Mr. Judd for me to return to Philadelphia the next night, if I shall be convinced there was danger in going through Baltimore the next day. I told him that if I should meet at Harrisburgh, as I had other places, a delegation to go with me to the next place (thru Baltimore) I should feel safe and go on. When I was making my way back to my room through crowds, I met Fred Seward. We went together to my room and he told me that he had been sent at the instance of his father and General Scott to inform me that their detectives in Baltimore had discovered a plot there to assassinate me. They knew nothing of Pinkerton's movements. I now believed such a plot to be in existence.

"The next morning I raised the flag at Independence Hall, went on to Harrisburgh with Mr. Sumner, (now) General Hunter, Ward H. Lamon and others; met the Legislature and people, dined and waited until the appointed time for me to leave.

"In the meantime Mr. Judd had so secured the telegraph wires that no communication could pass to Baltimore, and give the conspirators knowledge of the change in my plans.

Lincoln's New Hat.

"In New York some friend had presented me a new beaver hat, in a box, and in it had placed a soft wool hat. I never wore one in my life. I had this box in my room. Having informed a very few friends of the secret of my movements, and the cause, I put on an old overcoat that I had with me, and putting the soft hat in my pocket, I walked out of the house at a back door, without exciting any special curiosity. Then, I put on the soft hat, and joined my friends, without being recognized. I was not the same man. Sumner and Hunter wished to accompany me. I said no, you are known, and your presence may betray me. I will only take Lamon (now Marshall Lamon of the District of Columbia), whom nobody knows, and Mr. Judd, Sumner and Hunter felt hurt.

"We went back to Philadelphia and found a message from Pinkerton, who had returned to Baltimore, that the conspirators had held their final meeting that evening, and it was doubtful whether they had the nerve to attempt the execution of their purpose. I went on, however, as the arrangement had been made. It was a Special train. We were sometime in the depot at Baltimore. I heard people talking around, but no one particularly observed me. Thus I arrived, unexpectedly in Washington."

Knitted Rag Rug to Make in Soft Colors

By RUTH WYETH SPEARS

HERE is news for those who have been writing me for more rag rug designs. A special Rug Leaflet has been prepared for you. It will be included free upon request with your order for the two books offered herewith. If you already have these two useful books, send 6 cents in stamps for the Rug Leaflet.

Wooden knitting needles ⅜-inch in diameter are used for this rug. Cut or tear the rags ¾-inch wide and knit them in strips 10 inches wide, changing colors every 10 inches by cutting the material close to the needle and sewing a new color to it.

When three strips have been knitted with the colors arranged as shown here, sew them together on the wrong side with heavy carpet thread. Use a crochet hook of about the same size as the knitting needles for the edge of single crochet.

NOTE: Be your own decorator. Make new draperies; curtains; slipcovers; bedspreads and dozens of other things for every room. Mrs. Spears' Sewing Book No. 1—"SEWING, for the Home Decorator," shows you exactly how, with step-by-step illustrations. Book 2—Gifts, Novelties and Embroidery, shows you how to make fascinating things from odds and ends and will save its cost many times. Books are 25 cents each; if you order both books, the Rug Leaflet is included FREE. Address: Mrs. Spears, 210 S. Desplaines St., Chicago, Ill.

The President's Salary

The salary of the President of the United States is set by law at $75,000 a year with an additional $25,000 for traveling expenses. The wife of the President is allowed $25,000 a year for housekeeping expenses and can usually obtain further appropriation if more is needed. The government pays the salaries of head butler, housekeeper, valet and wife's secretary. The President's wife has at her call several young officers of the army and navy, known as social aides.

The ground hog saw his shadow alright on February 2nd, and according to tradition, we can expect six weeks of cold weather to follow Ground Hog Day. So far the weather man has missed entirely, and several spring-like, balmy days have been experienced But . . . this is North Iowa . . . and anything can happen in the way of weather.

This Scribe, along with the other members of the Editorial family d themselves to Des Moines, ay to look at the tall build- but mainly to call on rnor George Wilson, with m we had a date.

In due time we were ushered in- his private office . . . a bit y in the knees, perhaps, be- e we are not used to hobnob- with the higher-ups. But G nor Wilson soon put us all at ease with his big welcoming sm le, his sunny disposition and w enjoyed a ten minute visit with him, which we consider was a great privilege, as Governor Wilson is a very busy man . . . especially while the legislature is in session We left his office feeling hat we had stuck to our guns publican ranks. I-S-A-S

Having nothing to do after seeing the Governor, the party enjoyed a fine dinner at the Bishop Cafeteria, after which we did a bit of prowling around.

We took a jaunt through the Historical Building and saw many things of great interest and soon decided the place was worthy of a longer stay, so gave it the once over and decided to go back again for a more thorough study at some later date.

It's always a great pleasure to hunt up old friends, so we looked up our old friend, J. C. Underwood, Scout Executive who has his offices in the Old Colony Building J C. is the same good old fellow he was some nine years ago when he was at the head of the North Iowa Council. Under J. C.'s leadership, the Tall Corn Council at Des Moines has grown by leaps and bounds At the time Mr. Underwood came to Des Moines, some 200 boys attended the summer camp Last year over 1600 boys attended the camp, which has been improved every year and is now rated as one of the ten best camps in the United States. J. C. sends his regards to all of his old friends up this way.

Last week we stuck our neck out and got our ears knocked down . . . we made a poor guess on the outcome of the county basketball tournament. However, we were partly right and had three teams out of four in the semi-finals and finals. A basketball game can change awful quick and the outcome is something else. Well, we had the fun of guessing, anyway.

Whenever an artist or cartoonist makes a bad error, he always hides behind the "tradition which allows certain liberties of expression" and thus gets away with it.

In the Globe-Gazette of Saturday, February 4th, in the Daily Scrap Book Cartoon by Scott a drawing is shown by the artist of a man supposed to be operating an electric welder. The man wears a welder's helmet and heavy gloves, and underneath the cartoon is the following description: "Electric Sunstroke—an effect similar to sunstroke is sometimes experienced by persons exposed for a long time to intense electric light as in electric welding!" Which is all very good, but the funny part of it is the man in the picture is shown using an ACETYLENE welding torch, and not a positive electrolode used in electric welding, and which throws off an intense arc causing sunburn or in severe cases, sunstroke. This lowly Scribe does not claim to be a mechanic, but the cartoon caught our eye and we got a good chuckle out of it!

And, while on the subject, we clip the following from the Globe-Gazette of Monday's issue: "And now comes Clarence C. Snide of Fort Madison with expert opinion that the Globe-Gazette's "Picture of the Week" last Saturday showed a "sewing machine being threaded backwards."

"The manufacturer recommends holding thread in left hand and and putting into eye of needle from left to right," he said. "And the machine will not sew if threaded from right to left as shown in the prize winning picture."

Here's one that's hard to believe . . . but it's true. A Klemme young man dislocated a vertebrae in his back caused by sneezing! Believe it or not, but Kermit Koerner is the young man who had the unusual experience. Sunday evening "Kermie" let off a good healthy sneeze and immediatly fell down and could not get up. His parents got him in bed and called a doctor who found a bone in the backbone dislocated, pushed it back in place and next day "Kermie" was able to work as well as ever. Believe it. or not!

VAGABONDS TAKE TWO FROM FOREST CITY FIVES

Next Monday Will See Clear Lake And Aztecs Of Mason City On Local Floor

Monday night the Vagabonds took a twin bill from the Forest City Independent cagers, the reserves winning 105 to 18, to set a floor record for scoring, and the regulars winning 48 to 37.

The reserves jumped to an early lead and kept right on jumping throughout the game. R. Keeper, Hartzell and Blanchet looked best for Klemme with 40, 25 and 24 points respectively. Keeper, according to our back records, set a new floor record for individual scoring. The Forest City scoring (what there was) was evenly divided.

The Vagabond regulars also took an early lead and held a 20 to 8 margin at the half time. The end of the third quarter found them out in front 36 to 19 In the final period the Forest City five rallied but lacked sufficient drive to both er the Vagabonds much. Lemke, Keeper and Kilgore led the scoring for the locals with 14 points each, while Hauge looked best for Forest City with 16.

Next Monday night, February 13th, there will be a double header here with the reserves taking on the Aztecs of Mason City and the regulars meeting the Clear Lake Independents.

Tuesday night the Klemme squad journeyed to Garner for a practice game with Woden. After scrimaging for a whole hour we outpointed them about three to two. Too bad it didn't count for a conference game.

A fellow classman of mine told me that the only thing good about the county tournament was the Britt women!

It is too bad that our Ferdinand Wicks had to go out on fouls, but he did make the first basket.

Ruben, our one hand swisher, had Britt going around in circles.

FIRE
Because IT'S THE ONE SAFETY-LOCK CORD
and GEAR-GRIP TREAD

CAR OWNERS everywhere are claiming the extra blowout protection, non-skid safety of the new Firestone Champion Tire. And automobile manufacturers, knowing its outstanding performance, have adopted it for their 1939 models. On every hand you hear, "It's the most effective tire we have ever had on wet pavement and in mud and snow!" It's the hit of 1939!

The Firestone Champion Tire is a completely new achievement in safety engineering and the result of a new and revolutionary means of locking greater strength into the cord body of a tire. This is accomplished first by the use of a new type of tire cord called "Safety-Lock," in which the cotton fibers are more exactly interwoven to give greater strength. And then the fibers in each individual cord, the cords in each ply and the plies themselves are all securely bonded together by a new and advanced Firestone process of Gum-Dipping, which provides amazingly greater strength—and greater strength means greater safety.

The new Safety-Lock cord construction gives the added strength that makes possible the use of the new thicker, heavier, deeper Firestone Gear-Grip tread, which provides remarkably longer non-skid mileage. This sensational new tread is called "Gear-Grip" because of its unique design which has more than three thousand sharp-edged angles that grip the road with a sure-footed hold to protect against skidding and to assure a safe stop.

Come in today and equip your car with a set of new Firestone Champion Tires, the only tires made that are safe approved on the speedway for your protection on the highway.

SELL IOWA

Governor Wilson's known interest in the conservation and development of Iowa's natural resources and his quick action to prevent further dissipation of funds alloted to the Conservation Commission, recalls one paragraph in Governor Wilson's inaugural address which may signal new attention to the state's natural attractions. In this paragraph Governor Wilson said "we must campaign aggressively to recognize, preserve and advertise to the nation Iowa's resources and opportunities. Such effort is within the proper scope of governmental activity." From the standpoint of pleasure and recreation alone Iowa owns vacation areas of amazing beauty and resources. The average Iowan knows of a few of the state parks, lake regions and points of interest but very few have any idea of their number and extent. A motion picture developed last year by the Conservation Commission but withheld from public view until recently because its sponsors could not resist loading it with political propaganda, revaled for the first time that Iowa can offer attractions comparable to Minnesota and Wisconsin. These two states have demonstrated what a definite program of advertising can do without cost to the state. A similar program is possible in Iowa and sportsmen and sportswomen let out a cheer heard over the entire state when the Governor so plainly indicated his personal interest.

STILL SIMMERING

John F. Wessels, young independent who won election to the office of Secretary of State for the term from election day to Dec. 31, 1938, is reported considering legal action against Rob't E. O'Brian, former Secretary of State for $450 salary. O'Brian instituted a court action against Wessels' election which even though it lacked merit or foundation in fact delayed certification of the election until the period of the short term was passed. The court found no merit in Democrat O'Brian's contention and assessed him costs of the action; some $117. On the surface of things O'Brian engineered a profit of about $333. But should Wessels bring an action to collect the salary O'Brian would show a net loss of the $117 court costs. The question to be settled apparently is whether the salary should have been paid to O'Brian for services on a job the court said was not his; or if Wessels can collect the salary for services which he was not given an opportunity to deliver.

STEPPING UP

With the legislature at this time fully a week ahead of schedule as compared with the last session, possibility of the rumored "90-day session" is being talked again in the cloak rooms. This is in truth an economy-minded legislature and the customary lobbying groups are for the most part concentrating on defense of the status quo. With the Spring recess nearing and the final dates set which will end the presentation of bills except through committees, the tempo of the session will probably be stepped up when actual consideration of the bills begins.

UNDER WAY

The Committee on Consolidation and Coordination has been setting the stage with a group of minor reorganization bills some of which have passed the House as this is written. These do away with the geological survey, combine the several state libraries under a board of trustees, this latter passed the House by a unanimous vote. Republicans generally see a common objective. The shooting will start when details as to method become subjects for debate.

TAG-ENDS

olor Is the Major Theme in Gay Spring Song of Fashion

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

CLARION notes loud and clear the spring song of shion rings out the message the importance of color for ming modes. That which is tined to prove a dramatic or program starts out in dseason with handsome olens that are being tailored uringly into smart suits and sembles, also topcoats as ractive as ere the light of shion shown upon.

f you are impatient to don color u do not have to wait for the tual arrival of spring, neither are u called upon to travel to sunny mes to wear one of the new bright olen outfits, for at this very mo- nt fashion-alert women are ac- iring tailleurs of flashing, dash- gay wool weaves that forecast color-glory of suits, ensembles, sses and coats that will enliven style scene throughout the com- months.

Early spring tweeds "say it" ir- istibly via plaids and stripes that superbly colorful. Playing up ght woolens in trios is one way showing enthusiasm for the new velty stripes, plaids and checks. such instances a stripe, a plaid check and a plain are so inter- ated in color values as to make stunning costume such as any dy of fashion might covet.

The tailored suit of plaid woolen the foreground of our illustration softest shades of rose and green th wool jersey blouse of dusty nk would sound a triumphant high oratura note under a fur coat in y clime where the thermometer rsists in registering low or with ht accessories it will prove ideal a southern cruise.

From Paris comes the dramatic ort ensemble shown to the left in group. Lucien Lelong creates s style-significant costume of mul- olored stripe tweed. The blouse in green jersey enhanced with a illiant studded belt.

The task that fashion sets before the designer of smart wool outfits for spring is to so inter-relate colors, that combined make a harmonious individualized entity of their own. It is not beyond the bonds of good taste to combine a stripe, a plaid and a plain. In fact, the working of novelty woolens in trios is one of the smartest newest moves among designers who notably lead in costume art.

The dominant note in early spring fashioning is, as it has been for some time past, the contrast jacket and skirt two-piece suit. The stripes and plaids and nubby wool weaves that go to make up these youthful suits are more fascinating than ever. In stylizing these popular numbers designers are making a big play on pockets. Sometimes the front of the jacket is fairly plastered with innumerable decorative as well as useful pockets.

Newest among woolens in use for spring are diagonal stripe effects such as a gray wool with wide white stripes running diagonally across. Prospects are that we will be seeing more of stripes this season than ever.

Neckwear Means Accessories Also

Neckwear doesn't mean just pique and batiste or organdie collars.

Neckwear (at least the items sold at neckwear counters) doesn't mean just pique and batiste or organdie collars. Neckwear in the modern interpretation of the word means ruchings, embroideries, stiff little Buster Brown collars, Irish lace collar and cuff sets, little bows for your neck, with little lacy pockets to match. Neckwear may be in velvet with mother-of-pearl flowers and jewels. It may be of grosgrain ribbon or of chiffon, or it may be of velvet ribbon or of taffeta, satin, lame or kid. It may be an elaborate sequin bolero or it may be a wee jacket of ruffled net. At any rate neckwear is a most featured theme for spring.

Squirrel Sets Off Spray of Orchids

For night wear, one of the more delicate pelts should be chosen. Squirrel will set off a spray of orchids like nobody's business. In undyed squirrel look for clear gray, untinged with brown, and a close even pile. "Flank" squirrel is usually dyed brown, and costs less than gray.

Old-Fashioned Slips

Slips have gone old-fashioned—camisole tops with lace beading and baby blue ribbon. Lace ruffles and ribbon decorate the bottom of the slip, too.

For Winter Wear

A white chiffon blouse banded with black val lace is shown in one collection for wear with a black faille suit.

Lesson for February 12

Lesson subjects and Scripture texts selected and copyrighted by International Council of Religious Education; used by permission.

PETER HEALS A LAME MAN

LESSON TEXT—Acts 3:1-10; 4:8-12.
GOLDEN TEXT—Then Peter said, Silver and gold have I none; but such as I have give I to thee.—Acts 3:6.

Is Christianity on trial? Answers would differ, depending on varying points of view. Assuredly Christ is not on trial. He is the Son of God and the only Saviour of men, and we are "on trial" as to our attitude toward Him. It is also certain that the true Christian faith is not on trial. Even the liberal and so-called modernistic leaders confess that it is the only faith that has proved itself in the crucible of daily experience.

There is a sense, however, in which Christianity as a whole is on trial. The Church which professes to represent Christ on earth has failed most miserably at so many points that the world is looking at it with the same cold suspicion with which the Church was viewed in the time of Peter. The question which one can feel on every hand even though it is not asked in words, is, "What have you that will meet the unprecedented need of the individual—the social order—the whole of humanity?" There is a sufficient and a satisfying answer, but it is not found so much in the temporal realm as in the spiritual. We have something to offer that is better than silver or gold—the salvation which is found in none other than Jesus Christ, our Lord.

I. Better Than Silver and Gold (3: 1-8).

The lame man had long since abandoned hope of anything more than the coins that he could beg as he sat at the temple gate. He is typical of our hardened and cynical age which is interested only in what it can get in cash, and in what that money will buy. Even Christian people seem to have forgotten that "a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth" (Luke 12:15).

God has for us things far better than silver and gold—deliverance from the power and penalty of sin, glad liberation from the limitations of spirit which hold us down and make us content with the paltry alms of men. Where are these things to be found? In Christ How are they ministered? Through His faithful servants. Peter and John were the kind of men who, though busy, had time to pray (v. 1). If you know men or women like that, cultivate their friendship, look intently to them in faith (vv. 4, 5), receive their help (v. 7), and above all, believe in their Christ (v. 6), and you will receive that which is better than silver and gold.

God healed this man's body, but what is more important, He healed his spirit (v. 8). We need that kind of healing for the spiritual cripples of our day. The weak-kneed, lame-ankled, and spirit-darkened individuals in our churches and communities need the touch of God. Perhaps you may be used to bring them His message of deliverance and power.

II. Wonder and Amazement (3: 9, 10).

It has been suggested that one of the weak points in the ministry of the modern church is the lack of such miraculous deliverances from sin as those which caused the unbelievers of a generation or two ago to look with wonder on the ministry of the Word. After all there is no testimony just like that of a redeemed and transformed life. Men may argue with our philosophy, question our theology, but a redeemed life is a walking testimony in a community that no scoffer can refute.

There are two reactions recorded in the context of our lesson which reveal the possible attitudes of men toward such experiences. Some were amazed and believed in Christ. (4:4). Others hated the cause of Christ (4:16, 17) and they cast the preachers into prison (4:1-3). Did this discourage them? No, indeed. They knew that they owed allegiance to God rather than man (4:19, 20), and consequently used their very trial as an opportunity to proclaim

III. The Pre-eminent Saviour (4: 8-12).

Note here again that the speaker was a Spirit-filled man. That is the absolute prerequisite to effective proclamation of the truth. Observe also the care with which Peter makes known that he and John are to have no personal credit or glory. They "have something there" that might well be applied to present-day religious activity when many men must either have all the glory, or go off and start a new work where they can have it.

Let us make much of the clear teaching concerning the person and work of Christ which is found in these verses, particularly stressing His place of absolute pre-eminence as the one and only, and, at the same time, the all-sufficient Saviour of mankind. Let us not forget that "there is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved" (v. 12).

WHAT to EAT and WHY

C. Houston Goudiss Touches Upon the Food Values of Fish and Shellfish; Shows How They Can Help to Improve Nutritive Quality of the Diet

By C. HOUSTON GOUDISS

A PRESENT-DAY nutritionist might easily quarrel with the traditional distinction between fish, flesh and fowl. For the flesh of fish, cattle, swine, sheep and poultry is commonly referred to as "meat;" and the nutritive values of all these foods properly may be considered together. Their composition is very similar, consisting principally of protein, water and fat, with the chief variation occurring in the fat content. They also average about one per cent of minerals and contain some of the vitamins in varying amounts.

Fish vs. Other Flesh Foods

There is a wide variation among the different kinds of fish in the amount of fat they contain. In general, fish have less fat and more water than other forms of meat. Their tissue fibers are also shorter, which makes for ease of digestion. In many cases, their flavor is less pronounced because there are fewer extractives. For this reason, fish is considered less stimulating, and that is also why it is often served with some sort of sauce, or with a lemon garnish to point up the flavor.

The proteins of fish are regarded as equally useful with other forms of meat for helping to build and repair body tissues. Most lean fish are richer in minerals than fatty fish; in this respect, they resemble lean meats.

Salt water fish are notable as a source of iodine, required for the proper functioning of the thyroid gland. It is desirable that this mineral be included in the dietary to help prevent simple goiter.

The Cattle of the Sea

The most significant difference between fish and most other flesh foods is that with the exception of certain shellfish which are produced under government regulation, "crops" from the sea are neither planted by man, nor cultivated by him.

Unlike the farmer or the cattle man, the fisherman gathers his "harvest" without the previous effort of sowing seeds or cultivating plants; without the necessity of providing shelter or fodder.

To a man or woman who has never enjoyed the experience of catching fish for dinner, the sea may suggest nothing but an expanse of blue-green water. But to those who are familiar with the habits of its denizens, the sea is a fascinating place . . . teeming with life. It contains many forms of vegetable materials, of which seaweed is the best known. These provide food for the lower forms of animal life which inhabit the waters. They, in turn, are eaten by larger creatures. In the final analysis, all forms of animal life in the sea, as on land, are dependent for their sustenance upon the sun, which stores up energy in green plants.

Fish as a Source of Vitamin D

The sun is concerned, too, with the production of vitamin D, as it is by means of sunshine that our best source becomes available. Fish liver oils are the richest natural sources of vitamin D. This vitamin is necessary for the proper utilization of calcium and phosphorus in building strong bones and sound teeth. We prize highly the liver oils of the cod, halibut, salmon, swordfish and tuna for their fine amount of this precious vitamin.

The body oils of certain fish are also valued for their vitamin D. Some varieties that are notable in this respect are salmon, herring and sardines. It is agreeable as well as economical to obtain vitamin D by serving seafood, because fish supplies so many other valuable nutrients at the same time.

Fish Is Universally Available

There are perhaps more varieties of fish than any other type of first-class protein food. A government bulletin has listed 40 kinds besides smoked and salted fish and the various shellfish.

Thus the use of fish provides ample opportunities for varying the menu. Moreover, though fish is more perishable than other flesh foods, it is available today in every town and hamlet, however remote from the waterways.

No matter where she lives, the homemaker can choose from a wide variety of canned, dried, smoked, salted and quick-frozen fish. And both transportation and refrigeration have been so improved that fresh-caught fish are distributed far inland.

The quick-frozen fish should be handled as carefully as fresh fish, kept under refrigeration, and used within a reasonable time after purchasing. Canned fish, naturally, requires no refrigeration, and a supply can always be kept on hand both for everyday use and for emergencies.

The most important canned fish, in terms of the amounts packed and sold, is salmon. This flavorsome fish is an excellent and economical protein food which is also notable for its energy value; its calcium, phosphorus and iodine; and as a source of vitamins A and D. Other canned seafoods that are sold in volume include tuna, sardines, shrimp and clams. Canned crab and lobster meats and oysters are also to be found upon the shelves of most grocers, together with other varieties of seafood, some packed in tomato sauce.

When using canned salmon and other kinds of fish that have been put into the cans before cooking, it is advisable to conserve the juices which cooked out during the sterilization process, as these contain valuable nutrients.

Varieties of Shellfish

Clams, oysters, shrimp and scallops differ somewhat from other forms of seafood, chiefly in that they contain some carbohydrates. They have very little fat. Oysters are rich in iodine and they might be compared to the glandular organs, such as liver and kidney, as a source of three vitamins, A, B and G.

Place of Fish in the Diet

The most important contribution of all forms of fish is their proteins, which as we have seen may be used interchangeably with those of beef, pork, lamb, veal and poultry. The iodine of seafoods and shellfish is also extremely important, and in some varieties, the content of vitamins A and D. The more fatty fish, including mackerel, salmon, eels, herring, catfish and shad are comparatively rich in energy values. The fuel value of cod, flounder, perch, smelts and haddock, which are low in fat, and halibut and whitefish which have a moderate amount, may be increased through the use of a rich sauce, or they may be cooked in fat.

Taking into consideration its food values and economy, and when the preserved forms are utilized, its ease of preparation, the homemaker who desires to feed her family well should serve fish or shellfish, in some form, much oftener than once each week!

Fashion News in Patterns

IT'S fun to wear the new styles first! To have something decidedly smart and refreshingly different before everybody else starts to wear it. These patterns bring you ideas for new styles that are right up at the top of fashion's preferences, just as pretty and becoming as they can be! You don't need a lot of sewing experience to work with these designs. Each includes a step-by-step sew chart to guide beginners.

The Petticoat Dress.

If you want something just as youthful and flattering as it is excitingly new, make yourself the charming petticoat frock. The skirt is cut with an exaggerated flare, so that you can wear a real petticoat under it, or sew in petticoat ruffles, for rustle and charm. Above the doll-waist, the bodice is gathered over the bosom, and has a crisp little frill that simulates the line of a bolero. High-shouldered sleeves complete its Victorian charm. The whole thing does nice things to your figure, and it's just about the most seductively feminine fashion you can choose. Make it of taffeta, flat crepe or silk print.

Skating Suit With Hood.

Whether you ice or roller-skate, this is the thing to wear! And since the skating silhouette will be very smart for spring in sports clothes, too, you'll want a runabout outfit made with this same pattern, later on. The fitted, high-shouldered jacket, buttoned straight up to the throat, is excellent style for street and sports wear, as well as the swirling skirt. If you make this suit to wear for ice skating or in a cold climate, line both skirt and jacket of wool.

The Patterns.

No. 1669 is designed for sizes 12, 14, 16, 18 and 20. With long sleeves, size 14 requires 4¾ yards of 39 inch material. With short sleeves 4⅜ yards. Requires 4¼ yards of pleating.

SURVEY SHOWS 5,000,000 BIG GAME ANIMALS IN U. S.

The results of the Bureau of Biological Survey's first nation-wide attempt to determine the number of big game animals in the United States showed Iowa ranking 44th among all the states in point of numbers of big game animals, with a total of 450 white-tailed deer. The survey covered deer, elk, antelope, buffalo, moose, mountain goat, bighorn sheep, peccary and bears and the results showed a total of some five million of these animals in the confines of the United States.

Deer were by far the most numerous of all big game species, accounting for almost four and a half million of the five million total for all big game species. Michigan ranked first in deer population 874,000 and also in total big game with 878,000. Pennsylvania was second both in point of numbers of total big game and in white-tailed deer. California, which ranked third in total, had a greater population of mule deer, black-tailed deer and desert bighorns than any other state in the union

The Music Mothers' Club will meet at the school house Friday afternoon of this week.

HEATING BROOD SOWS' WATER UNPROFITBALE TESTS SHOW

Heating the drinking water for an overwintering sow results in no gain to the animal except, perhaps, in immediate satisfaction.

Nor does serving the water "cafeteria style" put more fat on a sow's back.

Data taken at the Animal Husbandry Department of Iowa State College proves these facts.

In one lot where 40 sows were running they were treated to an ever present supply of water generally kept at a tepid or lukewarm temperature.

The second group was fed cold water in a wooden trough once in the morning and once at ight.

Difference in gain? None.

Both groups drank about a gallon of water per head daily.

The United States Department of Agriculture administers 250 national wildlife refuges totaling close to 12 million acres. Of these, 136 are for migratory waterfowl, 60 for other migratory birds and 10 for big game.

Had Birthday

Sondra, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Orville Bridges, celebrated her fifth birthday last Wednesday afternoon at which time a number of her little friends were present for a party. Games were played and a nice lunch was served by Sondra's mother. Sondra received a number of nice. gifts.

WATERFOWL REFUGE AREAS TO BE ENLARGED; KOSSUTH COUNTY WILL HAVE REFUGE

The Migratory Bird Conservation Commission has approved the proposed acquisition by the U. S. Biological Survey of additions to 21 refuges in 18 states. Included in the approvals is an area in Union Slough in Kossuth County, Iowa.

A total of 18,219 acres is included in the proposed acquisitions, largest of which is a 6,180 acre area in the White River Migratory Bird Refuge in Arkansas.

A total of 147 Iowa farmers operating 23,000 acres, became cooperaors in the erosion control program during 1938. This brings the total number of Iowa cooperators to 2,692 and the total area involved to 448,000 acres.

PUBLIC HEALTH NURSE TELLS OF WORK ACCOMPLISHED IN HANCOCK CO.

Miss Edith May, public health nurse has finished the home visitation of patients in the Hancock county program for the discovery of unknown cases of tuberculosis

According to Miss May work has been concentrated upon persons who have had known, intimate contact with a case of tuberculosis, as shown by tuberculosis cases and deaths reported to the State Department of Health Examinations are available to all persons in this classification for whom they are requested by the family physician "The object of these examinations," Miss May states, "is to check the condition of these persons to make sure that tuberculosis is not also endangering them. Since the disease ordinarily fails to show its presence by marked symptons until an advanced stage is reached. it is necessary for the patient to go to the doctor for examination before ill health forces him to do so"

Tuberculin skin tests are performed at the individual doctors' offices. Miss May explains Persons visited by the nurse and who are referred by their physicians for the tuberculin test should see their doctor at once if they have not already done so. Chest X-rays will be taken of the positive seactors.

The X-ray conference will be held at Garner in the near future All persons referred by their physicians to attend the conference will be notified of the date and place by Miss May.

The Hancock-Winnebago County Medical Society and the Hancock Tuberculosis Association are cooperating with the State Department of Health and the Iowa Tuberculosis Association in conducting this program One-half of the costs of the work are being met by the State Department of Health, and one-half by funds from the sale of Christmas Seals

Klemme Shamrocks' ancient rivals, Goodell basketeers, will invade the Shamrock domain here Thursday night when the two rivals will meet for the second time this season

In an early season game the Shamrocks eked out a slender 21 to 17 victory over Goodell. Although Goodell has not done so well in cnference play, never-theless they have thrown some awful scares into the best teams in the county. It just is nobody's game when Goodell and Klemme play.

Both teams have improved a lot since their early season meeting and the game Thursday night here should be close.

Regulars Trounce Clear Lake, While Reserves Win Over Aztecs Of Mason City

In a doubleheader basketball game on the local floor Monday night, the Klemme Vagabonds took two games . . . the reserves winning over the Aztecs of Mason City 44 to 36 and the regulars winning over the Clear Lake Independents 55 to 34.

The reserves game was close in the first quarter and again in the last, when the Aztecs rallied and made a strong bid for the lead. However the Vagabonds were never headed and the whole team got in on the scoring. Paul was high with 12 points; Stokesbary and R. Keeper each got 10; Blanchet got 8, and Klotzbach 4. Arroya led the Aztecs with 15 points.

The regulars played on even terms all through the first half and the third quarter. In the final period they spurted ahead to gain their large victory margin. The locals led 20 to 17 at the half. Every man on the team showed well in the scoring column with Lemke taking the honors with 22 points. Rutan and Jenson led the Clear Lake scoring with 10 points each.

New Lands for Germany, Italy Is Totalitarian Aim This Year

By Joseph W. La Bine

EDITOR'S NOTE—When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of the news analyst, and not necessarily of the newspeper.

International

More wars have been fought from the speaker's platform than on the battlefield. More wars have been averted the same way. When news first leaked out that Reichschancellor Adolf Hitler would celebrate Nazidom's sixth anniversary with a speech, every able-tongued statesman in Europe hastened to speak first, because there was well-founded evidence that Hitler would announce a new program of German aggression for 1939. Since France is being hounded for territorial concessions by Germany's ally, Italy, and since Great Britain is France's friend, both London and Paris were discouragingly anxious that Hitler should speak no evil of them.

NO. 2 NAZI GOERING

The situation was plain. Britain and France were ready to appease once more, because after each successive appeasement it becomes more difficult to resist. Boasted No. 2 Nazi Herman Wilhelm Goering: "The greater Germany stands erect amid the world, firmly knit, a steel block of strength and cohesion. Free is the country . . . broken are the shackles of the reparations system. The honor and independence of the nation are safeguarded by the party and the new German defense power."

These were fighting words, but neither France nor Britain was willing to fight back. Two days before Hitler spoke, British Prime Minister Neville Chamberlain gave his speech, indicating that far from being stronger, Britain will resist dictatorships only under the most unlikely emergencies: "Peace could only be endangered by . . . a demand to dominate the world by force." This means that little by little Mr. Chamberlain is willing to concede to Italo-German demands. Completely ignored were the Spanish situation and Italian claims against France.

The same day, French Foreign Minister Georges Bonnet hastened to make his peace with dictators: "Regardless of the violence of the Italian press campaign (for French Mediterranean territories) I have warm friendship for the Italian people." M. Bonnet practically accepted Mussolini's demands when he declared Italy had been treated badly during and after the World war by France and Britain.

Such tactics fell little short of an outright invitation for Hitler and Mussolini to make demands. By the time Der Fuehrer marched to the rostrum in Berlin's Kroll opera house every European ear was cocked. By the time he left, Europe and the world knew what to expect from Hitler in 1939:

On Colonies. Germany will demand that all her pre-World war colonies be returned, otherwise the Reich will "remain an explosive factor in Europe." Reason: Germany must have access to raw materials. The alternative is to force exports.

On Italy. "War against Italy for any reason whatever will see Germany and Italy side by side," said Hitler. This statement is expected to bring an immediate resumption of Italian claims against France, though France and Britain may interpret it with tongue in cheek "War against Italy" means aggression against Italy, which is farthest from democratic thoughts. Though hoping Hitler meant to infer that he would not assist in aggression by Italy, London and Paris knew this was a futile hope.

On Other Demands. Allied reparations demands against Germany after the World war were "unreasonable and irresponsible." Hence Germany has been forced to make more competitive efforts in the world market Hinting at almost anything, Der Fuehrer dropped the remark that "forceful redistribution" of the world's riches was inevitable from time to time.

On Internal Affairs. The battle to overcome the "extremely grave economic condition" has been won with a "terrific" fight but must go on.

From such a speech only one conclusion could be drawn: That the Rome-Berlin axis will devote 1939 to pressing clearly defined demands against France and Britain, before the latter two nations have time to bring their armed strength up to par. After colonies have been restored, after Italy has won her claims against France, it will be time enough for Germany to turn attention to the project closest to her national heart, conquest of Europe's vast Ukraine.

Aviation

Production shortcomings of U. S. airplane manufacturers have bothered President Roosevelt all winter, especially since he discovered Germany's aviation industry was probably working at a much faster pace. To encourage air development as a defense precaution, the President's $552,000,000 special arms request included a sizeable budget for army and navy planes. But congressional appropriations come slowly; the White House wanted to give aviation a more immediate stimulant.

Brought back from France last month by Ambassador William C. Bullitt was news that Premier Edouard Daladier's government would spend $65,000,000 on American-built planes, provided the U. S. gave permission. Here was the immediate stimulant President Roosevelt sought, but he kept France's proposition a secret. First leak in the plans came when a new Douglas light diving bomber, scheduled for entry in army competition, crashed at Los Angeles. Test Pilot Paul Cable was killed but congress evidenced far more interest next day in the news that an injured passenger was Capt. Paul Chemidlin, representative of the French air ministry.

Missouri's Sen. Bennett Champ Clark demanded all information about French plane purchases be made public. His complaint: "I am interested in ascertaining whether the French government is being permitted to obtain options on latest-type planes which have not been available to our own army." Barked North Dakota's Sen. Gerald P. Nye, the nation's No. 1 pacifist: "The airplane deal with France . . . constitutes, in my opinion, a military alliance."

But as facts were produced at the inquiry, Senator Clark's fright seemed far out of proportion. No secret army aviation devices had been carried on the ship. More important, the bomber was not an army order, hence there was no violation of the rule forbidding foreigners to see or buy airships designed for army use. Nevertheless the plane could not be replaced by March 1 when competitive U. S. tests are scheduled. Since the Douglas bomber was undoubtedly the fastest ever developed army chieftains could rightfully be angry. But what made them hopping mad was the fact that France's plans had been discussed not with the war department, but with the navy.

President Roosevelt commented that it would be fine for French orders to be filled here, thereby expanding U. S. plane plants immediately. To expand them still faster he asked congress to appropriate the first $50,000,000 of his emergency army fund immediately, to be used buying 565 new army combat planes.

Siding with the White House on plane sales to foreign nations were the civil aeronautics authority and the Aeronautical Chamber of Commerce. Their program: To combat subsidized aircraft sales to Latin American nations by Germany and Italy, thereby protecting the substantial leadership enjoyed by U. S. plane manufacturers last year.

Miscellany

Invented, a telephone which gets power solely from the speaker's voice. Method: Impact of sound waves on the diaphragm generates power which carries signal to the receiving device

● Scheduled, by Soviet Russia, the most gigantic development program in national history by the third five-year plan's end, in 1942

● Lifted, a ban on smoking during sessions of New Hampshire's legislature, on motion of a non-smoking woman member "in behalf of the woman members."

Congress

Last autumn's election showed the new congress would be conservative. But no real test of President Roosevelt's power was expected until debate began over the 1939-40 budget, scheduled to boost the U. S. public debt by $3,326,000,000. Moreover congress was apparently willing to give the President his $875,000,000 deficiency relief appropriation immediately, leaving debate over politics-in-relief to a later date.

But all such forecasts are now disproved. In the relief deficiency request (designed to carry WPA expenses from March 1 to June 30), congress saw a symbol of continued big U. S. expenditures. First the house deducted $150,000,000. Next the senate approved the reduced appropriation, sending it back to the house with amendments to curb politics-in-relief. Thus a showdown between White House and congress has been precipitated unexpectedly, but observers could see far more than mere relief entering the picture.

Left vs. Right. Apparently ignoring last November's election results, President Roosevelt has given important posts to such alleged left wingers as Harry Hopkins and Frank Murphy. Latest appointment has been that of Thomas R. Amlie, former Wisconsin congressman, as a member of the interstate commerce commission. Amlie's advocacy of "production for use" and government ownership irks congress.

Defense. The White House has shown several signs of combining foreign policy with the new defense program. First evidence was the plan to fortify Guam, apparently to force Japan into peace. Second evidence was the French plane deal (See AVIATION). Many isolationist congressmen feel these incidents show a growing presidential tendency to forge entangling alliances with other powers.

Bridges. Impeachment proceedings are being considered against Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins for failure to press deportation proceedings against Harry Bridges, west coast labor leader and alleged Communist. Congress' unfavorable opinion of Madame Perkins reflects against the President.

KENTUCKY'S BARKLEY

Barkley-Harrison. In the senate, the relief vote gave Mississippi's Pat Harrison a chance to settle an old political score with Kentucky's Alben Barkley, who won the majority leadership from him two years ago. Sincerely economy-minded, Senator Harrison worked desperately for the smaller appropriation while Senator Barkley stalled the showdown vote one week in hope of gaining strength.

Significance. Leading the economy forces was Vice President John N. Garner, who by his victory won a personal advantage over President Roosevelt. This means that Mr. Garner now wields more power in congress than Mr. Roosevelt.

To establish peaceful sway over China, Japan must win the assistance of at least one influential Chinaman who can serve as chief puppet. Late last year Japan thought she had such a puppet in Wang Ching-wei, former Chinese premier who broached peace terms but was subsequently booted out of the powerful Kuomintang (nationalist) party.

Like Wang Ching-wei, most Chinese whom Japan would utilize against China break down in the final analysis, succumbing either to Kuomintang or Communist pressure. But Tokyo has located a new would-be puppet in old Marshal Wu Pei-fu, North China's war lord. Soon to be offered the job of heading Japan's new central Chinese government, Marshal Wu is by far the strongest candidate yet to bite on Tokyo's lure.

Outdated, sluggish and unpolished, Marshal Wu nevertheless has a highly respected name. His job: To pacify China by organizing a native army with Japanese financial assistance. This done, he must defeat combined Communist-Kuomintang opposition before his job can be called a success

WELL-FED LAYERS PRODUCE HEAVILY

Several Important Factors Must Be Considered.

By C. O. Dossin, Poultry Extension Specialist, Pennsylvania State College.
WNU Service.

Flocks of White Leghorns laying 50 per cent or better should consume at least 25 pounds of feed per 100 birds daily at this season of the year.

Size of bird, type of house, heated or non-heated, rate of production and use of lights are all factors which must be taken into consideration when figuring feed intake. Unless birds eat large quantities of feed they cannot maintain body weight and produce heavily.

Some poultrymen make a practice of feeding their birds all the scratch feed that they will eat at night and about half that amount in the morning. Fresh mash is usually fed each day. Increased feed intake can usually be obtained by stirring the mash in the feeders with the hand each time a trip is made through the building. The use of a fleshing mash or fleshing pellets at noon each day will also increase total feed consumption.

Some poultrymen make a practice of dabbing paint on the plumage of a few birds so they can be readily identified. These birds are then weighed at frequent intervals so as to keep a check on the weight of the flock.

Good Care and Feeding Thwarts Shipping Fever

Greater protection during shipment and careful management immediately after live stock arrives on the farm will lighten losses from shipping fever, says Dr. W. L. Boyd, Missouri university farm, veterinarian.

En route to the farm, either by truck or train, live stock is subject to many hazards—irregular feeding and watering, and bad weather among them. This applies especially to young stock, which may suffer serious loss in vitality. Regular feeding and watering plus protection against the weather will make the stock less likely to contact the fever.

Care and feeding of the animals once they are on the farm is the second important "ounce of prevention." Feed them a balanced ration, and don't attempt to get them on full feed too soon, cautions Doctor Boyd.

The use of vaccines and serums for the prevention and cure of shipping fever should be attempted only by trained veterinarians. To expect favorable results from vaccines, they should be administered soon after the animals arrive.

Houses Need Litter

Litter serves a triple purpose in the laying house. It serves to keep the floor warm, it helps to keep the house dry, and it provides material in which the birds can scratch. It is therefore necessary to have the floor littered for the pullets. The most satisfactory litter is highly absorbtive and will not pack. Various materials are used such as straw, peat, and oat hulls. These materials are placed on the floor of the poultry house to a depth of about 2 inches; when straw is used it should be applied to a depth of 6 to 8 inches.

In the Feed Lot

Potatoes to be fed to pigs should be cooked for best results.

Purebred pigs gain a third faster than scrubs, and on a fifth less feed for each pound of gain.

For best results in curing the meat, hogs should not be fed for 24 hours before slaughtering.

About one-third of the farmers in the United States don't put all their eggs in one basket, but have an outside business or industrial income.

WHO'S NEWS THIS WEEK

By LEMUEL F. PARTON

NEW YORK.—John F. Stevens was self-educated as an engineer. Therefore, he was an eclectic and readily made use of a retired murderer to accomplish a desperately important end, regardless of the lack of engineering precedent. He is now 86, one of the greatest of American engineers, the first engineer in charge of planning and building the Panama canal, recently awarded the Hoover medal by the American Society of Civil Engineers at its eighty-sixth annual meeting in New York.

Famed Engineer Used Murderer To Attain End

The murderer who came in handy was a Montana Blackfoot Indian. Jim Hill's new railroad, westbound from St. Paul, was rather impulsively started. It ran slap-bang into the impenetrable wall of the Rocky mountains. There was an Indian legend that there was a pass over the divide, along the course of the Marias river. Mr. Stevens, a young engineer for the railroad, talked to the Blackfeet about it. There was such a pass. They knew all about it. But not all of Jim Hill's wampum could bribe them even to point in that direction. This Marias pass was the dwelling place of evil spirits, of sorcerers, of dreadful demons, and all who went that way lost either their lives or their reason.

Mr. Stevens mushed over the mountains with the thermometer at 50 degrees below zero and found no pass. But, by chance, he found a wanderer in the wilderness, a Blackfoot driven out by his tribe because he had killed a man. The Indian had been having a difficult time. A few devils and monsters, more or less, meant little to him. They made a deal. The story of their days-on-end scramble to the roof of the continent through five feet of snow and bitter cold, with Mr. Stevens sleepless as he kept an eye on his homicidal guide, is one of the classics of the conquest of the wilderness. They found the pass, and their return was another desperate adventure. But soon the scream of locomotives was crying down the demons, who, presumably, moved on.

When the Panama canal was projected, John F. Stevens fought through, against weighty opposition, the lock principle against the sea-level plan. The engineer in charge, from 1905 until he was succeeded by General Goethals, he flattened all the demons of disease and disorder which had licked De Lesseps. General Goethals rated his work as among the greatest of engineering achievements. He was minister plenipotentiary to the Soviets in 1917, remaining six years and reorganizing and rebuilding their railroads.

DR. VANNEVAR BUSH, testifying on the patent system before the national economy committee at Washington, is the inventor of a "mechanical brain," or "thinking machine." It is as big as a sawmill that solves problems "too difficult for the human brain." It works nicely, and Franklin institute awarded him a medal for it.

Scientist's Brain Machine Downs Human Thinker

One can think offhand of a lot of vexing problems that might be tossed into its hopper these days. Set up in congress, dealing the answers on war and peace, national defense, relief and a balanced budget, it ought to save a lot of money.

Dr. Bush, former vice president of Massachusetts Institute of Technology, became president of the Carnegie institution on January 1 of this year. He is one of the most distinguished mathematical physicists in America. A tall, genial, bespectacled scientist, with a slightly stooped and somewhat stringy figure, with untamed hair, he leads reporters quite out of their depth. His metallic cerebration was just one of many of his interesting devices and discoveries, including, particularly, research in the transmission of electric power, to which he has made notable contributions.

The son of a distinguished Boston clergyman, he romped through Tufts, Harvard and M. I. T., picking up three degrees in three and one-half years, thereafter teaching at M. I. T.

On February 19, 1936, addressing the New York Patent Lawyers' association, he was severely critical of the American patent system, for its "appalling fixity and lack of adaptability." At the current committee hearing, he commends it, but both meager news reports are out of their context, and Dr. Bush doubtless could defend himself against charge of inconsistency.

160 Years Ago They Celebrated Washington's Birthday — What a Riot That Turned Out to Be!

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

© Western Newspaper Union.

PRESENT-DAY visitors to Williamsburg, Va., will find there numerous reminders of the fact that George Washington was a familiar figure on its shady streets in the days when it was the colonial capital of the Old Dominion. But few of them realize, perhaps, that Williamsburg was also the scene of the most riotous celebration of his birthday in the history of this country, even though Washington was not there to witness it. Yet, such was the case, and that celebration took place just 160 years ago.

The first public celebration of Washington's birthday had been held the previous year—in 1778. Washington was then with his army at Valley Forge and, since Pennsylvania had accepted the new calendar (revised by Pope Gregory in 1581 but not adopted by England until 1752) the celebration was staged on February 22, the same date which we observe. Incidentally, Virginia ignored the new calendar until after Washington's final birthday, which he celebrated at Alexandria in 1799 on February 11, his real birthday according to the old calendar. So George Washington, while he was living, was a man with two birthdays a year!

Our knowledge of the Valley Forge celebration is obtained from Washington's expense accounts which were first published by John C. Fitzpatrick, chief of the manuscript division of the Library of Congress, in 1917. They show that he distributed a gratuity of 15 shillings to the band of Procter's Fourth Continental Artillery.

Serenade at Valley Forge.

"The army knew that he liked music and this knowledge carried Procter's artillery band (it was nothing but a drum and fife corps) tramping through the ice and snow of that dreary winter in 1778, in Valley Forge, to serenade their general on his birthday," writes Mr. Fitzpatrick in his book, "George Washington Himself—A Common Sense Biography Written From His Manuscripts," published in 1933. "It was a gesture of affection which brought the ragged musicians some of the very few silver coins left in the purse of the Commander-in-Chief."

As a matter of fact these "very few silver coins" were later repaid for Washington's expense accounts show that he charged this amount to the government as a legitimate expense, just as he charged the tips he always gave to servants in the houses which he used as headquarters during the Revolution for the "extra trouble" his presence caused them. He felt justified in doing this since he never received any salary from the government while serving as commander-in-chief of the Continental army.

With the precedent of observing the birthday of the "Father of His Country" (he was first called that in a German almanac, published at Lancaster, Pa., late in 1778) thus established at Valley Forge, it was natural that his army should hold another celebration the next year.

In November, 1778, Washington put his army into winter quarters at various places on either side of the Hudson river to keep an eye on the British commander, Sir Henry Clinton, who had evacuated Philadelphia and occupied New York. For his own headquarters Washington chose Middlebrook, N. J.

Christopher Wren Hall on the campus of the College of William and Mary. In front is the Lord Botetort statue and a cannon of Revolutionary war days.

In December he set out for Philadelphia whence Martha Washington had journeyed from Mount Vernon to meet him. On January 6, 1779, they attended a ball in honor of the seventy-third birthday of Benjamin Franklin, who was then serving as ambassador to France. Concerning this party, Franklin's daughter, Mrs. Richard Bache, wrote to her father:

"I have lately been several times invited abroad with the General and Mrs. Washington. He always inquires after you in the most affectionate manner, and speaks of you highly. We danced at Mrs. Powell's your birthday, or night I should say, in company together, and he told me it was the anniversary of his marriage; it was just 20 years that night."

On January 18 Washington attended a banquet given by congress in honor of the French minister and during the remainder of his stay in Philadelphia he sat twice for portraits. One of them was by Du Simitiere, a French painter, but the other is more famous. It was painted by Charles Willson Peale who depicted him at the Battle of Princeton.

On February 2 Washington and Martha set out for Middlebrook and there on February 22 his birthday was again the occasion for a public celebration. It was a similar affair to the one in Valley Forge the previous year and, since Martha was present, it was evidently a very decorous one.

Far different, however, was the celebration of the event down at Williamsburg. The students at the College of William and Mary had prepared a subscription paper to ask contributions for a big birthday party honoring the distinguished Virginian, who was commander-in-chief of the forces fighting for American liberty. Their enthusiasm was somewhat dampened when Gov. Patrick Henry refused permission for the celebration to be held. Even though the cause was a worthy one, he "could not think of any kind of rejoicing at a time when our country was engaged in war, with such gloomy prospects."

But the irrepressible collegians went right ahead with their preparations and a grand ball on the night of February 22 was given in the historic Raleigh tavern, the scene of so many important social events in old Williamsburg. Some time during the evening a party of hilarious students found unguarded two cannon belonging to the Virginia militia and dragged them to the Raleigh to climax the evening by firing a salute in honor of General Washington.

Soon afterwards a lieutenant appeared with a platoon of soldiers to claim the cannon. The celebrants made him welcome, carried him into the Raleigh and supplied him with punch to drink. But this hospitality could not dissuade him from his purpose—he had been sent to get the cannon, by force, if necessary. When a certain Colonel Innis, who was one of the sponsors of the celebration, declined to give them up the lieutenant reported the matter to Captain Digges, his superior, who in turn notified Governor Henry of the situation.

The governor told Captain Digges to use his own judgment in handling it. Thereupon, according to the diary of David Meade Randolph, one of the William and Mary student celebrators:

"In the pride of his power, with 60 men, he (Captain Digges) drew up in form; and demanded the cannon at the point of his bayonet! Innis stept up to Captain Digges, and shaking his cane at him, swore that he would cane him, if he did not depart instantly with his men!

"This enraging Digges—he said that if the pieces were not surrendered he would fire upon the party. Innis repeating his threat, ordered Finnie to charge the cannon with brick bats: the mob in the street, and the gentlemen of the ball, re-echoing the order.

"The pieces were soon charged with brick bats: Innis all the while firmly standing by the Captain at the head of his men, daring him to fire! After some delay, the Captain retreated with his men; and the evening closed with great joy."

But that wasn't the end of the affair by any means. The next day Colonel Innis was arrested and arraigned before the Hustings court for riot. In the courtroom he was confronted again by Captain Digges. Hot words passed between the two men and again the colonel threatened to "cane" the captain. Colonel Innis' anger abated, however, when the court released him and he walked triumphantly out of the courtroom with the "friends who had shared the honors of the preceding night"—so the Randolph diary assures us.

Honored by French.

The next Washington's birthday celebration of which we have any record occurred during the last year of the Revolution. Count Rochambeau, commander of Washington's French allies, was in the habit of honoring his sovereign on his birthday and as a gracious gesture he prepared to do the same thing for Washington. Accepting February 11, instead of February 22, as Washington's birthday, Rochambeau wrote from his headquarters at Newport, R. I., on February 12 as follows:

"We have put off celebrating that holiday till today, by reason of the Lord's day and we will celebrate it with the sole regret that your excellency be not a witness of the effusion and gladness of our hearts." So the celebration was held on February 12 and the "effusion and gladness of our hearts" took the form of a holiday for all the French troops, a parade and the firing of a salute in honor of the American commander.

Twelve days later Washington wrote from his winter headquarters at New Windsor, north of West Point, to the French general as follows:

"The flattering distinction paid to the anniversary of my birthday is an honor for which I dare not attempt to express my gratitude. I confide in your Excellency's sensibility to interpret my feelings for this, and for the obliging manner in which you are pleased to announce it."

How did Washington celebrate his birthday after his great task of winning freedom for his country was ended? In 1783 he resigned his commission in the army and retired to Mount Vernon, hoping to spend the rest of his days as a Virginia planter. Characteristic of his simplicity and love for the soil is this entry in his diary during 1785: "Tuesday, February 22. Removed two pretty large and full grown Lilacs to the No. Garden gate, one on each side, taking up as much dirt with the roots as could well be obtained . . . I also removed from the Woods and old fields several young Trees of the Sassafras, Dogwood and Redbud to the shrubbery on the No. side of the grass plot." Thus the hero of the Revolution celebrated his birthday — planting trees!

Birthday Was Moving Day.

But even more prosaic was his celebration of his first birthday as President of the United States. says his diary for "Monday, February 22, (1790). Set seriously about removing my furniture to my new home. Two of the gentlemen of the family had their beds taken there and would sleep there tonight."

This "new home" was the first Executive Mansion, the McCombs house on Broadway. New York city, and the mind of the first President of the United States on that historic birthday was occupied, not with the affairs of state, but with the homely details of placing and arranging furniture. However, there was evidently a reception of some sort in his honor at that time for he records, somewhat naively, on February 23: "Few or no visitors at the Levee today, from the idea of my being on the move."

Although Washington was loath to encourage any celebration of his birthday, since it might smack of homage to royalty, his people were eager to honor him on that occasion. Especially was this true after the seat of government was moved from New York city to Philadelphia.

In 1795 a ceremonious function was held in the capital in honor of the President's birthday and the following year an even more elaborate one was given. Fitzpatrick says of it: "The church-bells rang, the light horse, artillery and light infantry seized the opportunity to turn out in full strength, to show off their new uniforms, and artillery salutes were fired. Congress, the state officials, the clergy and others visited the President to pay their respects and in the evening the Assembly gave a ball, which the President and Mrs. Washington attended, which was, Dunlap's Advertiser reported, 'the most brilliant display of beauty, perhaps, ever exhibited in this city.'"

Portrait of Washington painted by Charles Willson Peale in Philadelphia shortly before his birthday celebration at Middlebrook, N. J., February 22, 1779.

Soon after the Revolution closed and even before Washington became President, his Virginia friends instituted one celebration of his birthday which lasted for many years. This was the "Birthnight Ball," first held in Alexandria and attended by the hero of the Revolution whose diary betrays his great fondness for "routs" and who never failed to attend one of these functions.

Washington's last birthday, in 1799, was marked by the marriage of his beloved adopted daughter, Nellie Custis, who requested him to wear the splendid new uniform of General of the Armies of the United States, an office that had been created for him the previous year. Instead, the general presented her with the magnificent white plumes from the uniform and appeared at the wedding clad in the uniform in which he had won his greatest fame—the old Continental buff and blue. Beneath his arm was a faded cocked hat with a simple ribbon cockade, a reminder of those stirring days when he was waging his fight for the liberties of his country.

Just as simple and unassuming as this gesture was his comment in his diary for this, his last birthday. He merely wrote: "The Revd Mr Davis and Mr Geo Calvert came to dinner and Miss Custis was married at Candle light to Mr Lawrence Lewis."

Ink Spots And Spatters

By Jergie

Although this Scribe is not a member of the American Legion, never-the-less we enjoyed sitting in with the boys at their meeting last Thursday evening, when they looked over plans for a Legion hall. After the meeting a roast venison sandwich and coffee was served by the committee in charge. Where did the venison come from? It's like Wimpy who invites Popeye to a duck dinner. . . Popeye brings the duck. Yep, this Scribe provided the venison . . . and some day we will tell you about the big game hunt! We promised the boys we would have buffalo meat for a feed when their new hall was built. We might have to shoot a bull . . . but we are shooting the bull most of the time anyway!

Great bunch of fellows . . . those Legionaires.

I-S-A-S

The truth will out . . . give a calf enough rope and he will hang himself . . . and we figured if we stirred up enough accusations somebody would spill the beans. First we must apologize to our friend Earl Hall of the Mason City Globe-Gazette for accusing him of being at the bottom of the plot of sending us a "pad for the two-holer" some weeks ago. Earl is as innocent as a new born babe . . . so is the "Aye 'n Naye" engraving bunch (we hate to admit it) but the finger of justice points them all out as angels! This scribe has some "shirt-tail" relationship engaged in selling prunes and beans in Mason city and our sleuth has traced the "pad" to his store. Our hand writing expert has secured samples of his handwriting . . . and a little bald-headed runt will suffer . . . and we don't mean maybe! Sorry Earl, we accused you falsely.

I-S-A-S

Of course there will be those who delight in "knocking" anything that's good for the community. The matter of building a new Legion Hall will bring them out of hiding. We suggest they use their energy by driving nails when help is needed . . . that kind of knocking will help build a much needed project.

I-S-A-S

Walt Thada was "in the dumps" all day Tuesday, as he had failed to receive a single valentine. This is just a hint to remember him next year . . . and how!

I-S-A-S

The groundhog is making a noble effort to give us six weeks of cold weather. So far it is about a fifty-fifty proposition, . . one day fair and warm, the next day cold and cloudy and so on.

I-S-A-S

A bit of humor was injected into the Epworth League meeting Sunday evening after a study had been made of famous American Negroes. The leader asked for volunteers to name a few well-known negro actors or dancers, when one young man quickly spoke up "Bill Robinson," another piped up: "Step 'n Fetchit," but the climax came when yet another young man said: "Amos 'n Andy."

I-S-A-S

And another story came out of the League party the other evening. The young ladies were getting ready to serve the lunch when one of the fair damsels inquired as to where the cookies might be found, and was told to look in the sack on the cupboard. "Why, those aren't cookies," she said and the other girl peered into the sack and exclaimed, "Mother's lettuce!"

Art Wellemeyer believes in getting to the point. The drinking fountain inside his store failed to stand up under the sub-zero weather and Art placed a sign on it which reads: "Froze up—try eating snow!"

SCHOOL IMPROVEMENT

The new merit-demerit system used at the school has created a new sense of feeling which is felt all around Not only do the boys think that it needs improvement, but the girls and faculty think so, too. One of the things that the student does not know is that Mr. Galbreth really would like to have suggestions for betterment of the system. Too many demerits are given and not enough merits. We all know that one is ready to criticize bad work but if one sees good work he will just pass on without giving any encouragment to the builder or worker. This is just one human tendency which I think everyone should overcome for his good and everyone else's.

Everyone agrees that the system needs improvement. The development of this system can be made by only the student. Anyone who has any idea on this system will be heard, and this new idea will be brought before the student council. Another thing is to have a chart on which merits and demerits can be posted. More merits have been given than what are listed on the chart' The teachers have taken a personal interest in the development of the new system. Right now I think they will all agree that it is in a very crude form. Mr. Galbreth says that merits should be given to those who participated in the music night programs, those in basketball or other sports and for outside activities in which the student gives valuable study time to participate in special events.

It would be better if more merits would be given than demerits, so let's all join in and help Mr Galbreth's hope of having the scales tilt towards the merit side.

BLOW 'EM UP and BUST 'EM NEWS of the WEEK by BARSWICK

The county tournament seemed to do the girls a lot of good. Anyway, on coming home there was a lot of talk about "that blonde or brunette, I was sitting by, Boy, was he handsome." At least those are the stories by: Dorothy B., Irene B.; Gertrude G., and Ruth Stille.

"Windy" Bill Schwichtenberg certainly deserves his name. Ask Irene Becker.

H. Blickenderfer was showing off his airplane in class the other day He admitted it wouldn't fly.

Ruben G. will have a lot of tape to remove when he receives a little package from Belmond.

The freshmen boys weren't the only ones looking for next year prospects when the eighth graders took their exams the other day Allan certainly was glad when the one girl visited in the assembly

We are wondering why it was decided kind of sudden like that Ruben G., Marvin S, Iren eS., and Mildred P. were not going with the class on Saturday to have their pictures taken. The boys claimed they had work to do. The girls had a similar alibi. Maybe they can pose better when Prof isn't around The rest of the seniors claimed that they never took good pictures anyway. They also figured that Saturday was as good a day as any to get out of work.

To you reading this column of nonsense, we would feel indebted to you if you would send in an idea we could use in publishing this column, for Barz and Wicks are having lapses of memory.

—K H S—

AROUND K. H. S. ASSEMBLY

The Seniors were disgusted Saturday that the weather man had to spoil their trip to Russell's Studio at Mason City to smile for the camera birdie. They expect to go this Saturday. They are glad they have it coming yet.

The Senior manuel training classes are making pieces of small furniture, such as end tables, magazine racks, and lamps—besides the new game chinker check boards.

The Freshman home economics class has been testing different kinds of materials by burning them and by looking at them under the microscope Miss Greiner has already quoted Ellen K. as the microscope's second inventor

The general science class has been studying the navigation of balloons, airplanes, and zeppelins.

The Juniors received their class pins and were proudly displaying them last Monday The pins have a green and gold "K" on them, and the class can well be proud of them, as they are attractive.

The English literature class is taking up grammar, as a part of their work in English. Each Friday, themes are handed in and the rest of the week is spent in trying to correct frequently made grammatical errors.

We Seniors are glad to say Morris Neuhring is back to school after an absence of six days

Doris has recuperated also from a severe cold and sore throat.

Marvin S Ruben G. and Ronald G were absent Thursday but not on account of illness. They went to Mason City and tried to break the camera. I guess they didn't succeed—We hope not!!

The typing class has begun Tabulations. They are still taking speed tests and decided improvement has been made within the last few weeks. The class is also having spelling lessons on the typewriter.

bill from the Forty-eral Assembly to be-via the governor's sig-signed by Governor
February 6. It was a g administrators and executors of estates to encumber personal property m order to take advantage of the grain sealing program Being the first new law Governor's act was duly noted by the press even to the hour of signing which was 9 32 a m. To sign the bill, Governor Wilson used a new pen from a beautiful set valued at $175. The pen set ,of massive onyx construction fitted with two of the world's finest fountain pens and a fine 8-day clock, is the gift of an Iowa manufacturing company

STATE OWNED CARS

Meeting as the Executive Council a few days ago all state officers voted to drop state owned automobiles for their personal use Where these can be used in departments requiring transportation they will probably be transferred thus saving the state the cost of replacements However, the luxurious limousine used by former Governor Kraschel, and cars used personally by other officers of the Kraschel administration which are too costly in original investment and in operation costs for departmental use, will probably be sold to the highest bidder. Deterioration will continue even if the car is in storage and sale will end operating and upkeep overhead immediately.

BOILER FACTORY

Most of the state offices in the Capitol building are adequate for their purpose even though many of the services now performed were not dreamed of when the building was designed An exception is the office of State Treasurer W. G. C. Bagley which resembles the parts department of a large garage and sounds like a boiler factory when its many employees swing into their day's work. Piled high with filing cases and cluttered with a growth of bookkeeping machines, typewriters and other necessary office equipment, employees are forced to sit, stand and move in quarters so cramped it is a miracle the office is able to perform the myriad of services required of it An unofficial survey of this condition by members of the Executive Council and interested legislators is expected to result in some relief in the interest of efficiency

NEW OFFICE BUILDING

A bill setting aside $3,000,000 in liquor profits for the purpose of constructing a new state office building passed the senate last session by a huge majority and only missed house approval by a hair The bill was introduced in the senate two years ago by Senator E P Donchue, New Hampton Republican who confesses to a timely interest in the matter today but who has not given the subject any very definite attention so far in the present session Most legislators frown over the growing total of rentals being paid for office space necessary to house the many bureaus and commissions The administration hopes that many of these bureaus can be abolished or consolidated but even this, in the opinion of some legislators, will not relieve the congestion in certain state house departments.

IN THE MILL

A BILL — to authorize diversion of use tax collections to homestead credit fund sufficient to provide full 25 mill credit — to authorize county treasurer to refuse to register automobile for person who has not paid personal taxes due — to permit cities and towns to issue revenue bonds in financing self-liquidating improvements — to exempt from sales tax goods and merchandise purchased and used in religious and charitable work — to require that retailers remit all moneys collected in sales tax — to license and regulate cold storage plants and to place lien on contents for locker rental — to require liability insurance on school busses and pupils — to increase auto license fees from present 1 per cent of value plus 40c per hundrd weight to 2 per cent of value plus 40c per hundred weight with a reduction of 50 per cent of fee to owners filing proof of a definite minimum of liability insurance — to require manufacturer, jobber or wholesaler to affix cigarette tax stamps before they are put in the hands of retailer — appropriating $70,000 for world's fair exhibits and 100,000 permanent state advertising fund — to increase liquor permit fee from $1 to $2 — to reduce membership of social welfare board to three full time members and to include Iowa Emergency Relief Administration under social welfare board — to establish farm-to-market road program with 1650,000 transfer from primary road fund with estimated annual income of $1,500,000 hereafter from 15 per cent diversion of motor vehicle license fees to match Federal appropriations —

PASSED

— by both houses — a bill legalizing 1934-1937 tax levies in counties where auditor failed to take into account estimated receipts from moneys and credit tax, also provides for recovery of refunds made following supreme court decision — to combine library board and historical commission —

TAG ENDS

Members of the House of Representatives slept in cells at Ft. Madison penitentiary when they inspected the prison — they were locked in cells scattered throughout the institution — Representative Paul Troeger of Ottumwa was almost forgotten the next morning until one of his companions missed him — on the same trip Representative William Kruse of Rockford met a chum of his boyhood days who has been in the prison twenty-seven years — Governor Wilson's choice of Charles R. Fischer for Commissioner of Insurance is probably the first appointment made by anybody that all Republicans will concur in.

Iowa Teachers To Get Consideration By Legislative Bodies

re in the mass of bills
ht before the present he general assembly in e to provide a retire-
y system for teachers
. Because this bill will ect a large number of rural teachers in this and because it will inect all of the present students in our schools worth some explanation.
ne of the nineteen states on still without some eacher retirement law, um as the most literate union is being chal-
ther states who are at-better trained teachers superior provision for security.

es Samuelson, executive secretary of the Iowa State Teachers Association, has defined a state retirement annuity system as "a sound business-like plan enacted into law to improve schools by helping aged or disabled teachers to retire from active service on a modest but assured income for life, to be paid for jointly by the teachers and the state."

She further points out some of the reasons why the Teachers Association and a great many laymen and legislators are backing the bill:

1. The vast turnover of teachers in our schools each year is hard on both students and taxpayers. This situation would be greatly stabilized by annuity protection for teachers.

2. Whatever improves the morale of the teaching body, brings dividends to the students. By giving teachers a measure of the same security enjoyed by other workers in business and industrial concerns, this improvement would be realized. (Teachers are not eligible for social security benefits under the present set-up.)

3 An annuity law would make the educational profession attractive to the more talented young people who now shun it as a profession because of its uncertain future.

4. The protection afforded by a retirement system would encourage teachers to invest time and money in study and travel which would further improve their qualifications and help them keep their teaching up to date.

Miss Samuelson concludes an article in the current issue of "Midland Schools" with this statement:

"Teachers realize that such legislation requires some financial outlay by the state, but they have been assured that the funds are available, the only question being their distribution. They are ready to contribute the matching funds. Teachers are not coming to the legislature with selfish hands. Their record of service over the years attests the missionary zeal with which they serve the state. The welfare of the schools is their uppermost concern.

"If justice comes to the top, this effort to pay the debt which the present owes to the past and to the future will be more than just a "pocketful of dreams" for the people of our school districts."

ew Wash Materials Remind It's Time for Spring Sewing

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

S A proper approach to the per- ennial spring sewing program soon will be staged in countless seholds, we know of no gesture will so inspire to hurry and going as to take a day off and fabric sight-seeing. We make the diction that at just a mere npse of the new textiles with refreshing departure from old, in the way of texture, pat- ings and colorings, you will feel urge stirring to cut and to baste to sew.

this day and age when won- are being performed in the of textures and weaves, it be- es absolutely imperative that woman who would sew success- must know materials. This is cially true in regard to wash ics that are a revelation as to science is achieving in the way non-shrinkage, color-fast-boil- tones and tints and in the way eaves of entirely new origin. ider for example the new spun fabrics that are as lovely and ite in texture as imagination conceive.

you ask to see these fas- new spun rayons take note eir marvelous colorings that refreshingly different from sual run. Many of the beauti- ues and motifs for design are to fine Chinese porcelains excel in subtle soft blues and y yellows, lime greens, peach- pinks and cherry blossom You'll love these new wash that are so handsome they do not look like washables, ey are and what's more they reated to an anticrease process greatly enhances them from the ical standpoint. Some of the est washable crepes combine west fabric (spun rayon) with the oldest (pure linen).

You can get these winsome spun rayon crepes in delectable monotones or in prints that are so lovely mere word pictures fail to describe them. On your fabric sight-seeing tour be on the lookout for prints that stylize a flight of snow white birds against a sky of peachbloom pink or a seashell motif on a lime green background and you will thus sense the charm and beauty of the new spun rayon crepes.

Softer to the touch than all wool, yet cozier than cotton by far is an imported material that looks like and feels like a million, yet it can be sent to wash with a carefree mind for the fabric has been sanforized-shrunk. See to the left in the picture a housecoat made of this new flannel (half wool, half cotton) which is lightweight as thistledown. This particular smart plaid fabric tailors to perfection.

To the right in the illustration unusual charm is expressed in a quaint dirndl dress of flowered cotton poplin—one of the dependable modern cottons in that it does not shrink out of fit when washed. It is trimmed with Czechoslovakian embroidery and buttons in authentic Czech design. Wear it over shorts and cummerbund when en route to active sports, or as a full-time daytime dress. Either way, it is perfect with its matching bonnet.

You will find a bolero costume made of gingham (faithful standby) much to your liking. Why not enter it on your sewing list, for this two-piece is easy to make, so why not look up a reliable pattern and have it in readiness to wear this spring with dainty blouses? The model centered in the group is in blue and white check. The skirt is flared for fullness. The long-sleeved bolero jacket has wide revers and exposes cuffs of white pique caught with large mother-of-pearl links. Matching gingham trims the rough straw sailor hat she has in her hand.

Petticoat, Tiered Frocks Real News

If you see a glimpse of lacy frou-frou peeping from under her neat little afternoon dress of silk crepe, do not make the mistake of saying "Pardon me lady, your petticoat is showing." If you do milady is apt to airily reply, "Sure, that's the intention." Yes'm it's only too true, petticoats are in fashion and furthermore the so-termed petticoat dress that is causing so much excitement in fashion's realm is actually styled so as to reveal a tantalizing glimpse of its frill.

Another sensation on the dress program is the new flounced silhouette. Fashion is flouncing everything that will gracefully yield to flouncing. Daytime skirts rise tier upon tier done in a restrained way while soft afternoon and evening frocks are widely flounced in the good old-fashioned now very new-fashioned way.

Open Toes, Heels In New Footwear

The vogue of open toes and open heels has reached such a state that it will be difficult before many weeks to find even an Oxford which supplies good foot coverage. Shoe styles for spring have been placed on exhibition and indicate that pumps and Oxfords as well as sandals expose the toes and the back of the heels.

BEVERAGE ALCOHOL AND ITS SOCIAL PERILS

LESSON TEXT—Amos 6:1-6; I Peter 2:11, 12, 4 1-5.

GOLDEN TEXT—It is good neither to eat flesh, nor to drink wine, nor anything whereby thy brother stumbleth.—Romans 14:21.

"Hazards in the use of alcohol in a machine age"—this is the topic assigned for our lesson today. It is a good one and worthy of the careful thought of every intelligent citizen With automobiles alone killing over a hundred persons a day, and the obvious connection between alcohol and death on the highway, we might say much about the folly of trying to cut down traffic accidents while we are licensing more and more "taverns" along the road to fill the drivers with the destructive stuff.

There is much that might be said about the social havoc that is being wrought by alcohol. It is bad enough that a man pays 25 cents for a drink, but even worse, that he gives 25 minutes of his life for each indulgence But the liquor industry covers that up under a mask of festivity, making booze look like a desirable adjunct to congenial and successful living. It does not picture the bleary eye and the babbling tongue of the drinker, nor does it present the broken-hearted mother, the devastated home, the ragged children, and the empty cupboard Liquor is one of America's major problems. Let us face it.

The Scripture portions assigned for our lesson rightly emphasize fundamentals, the first being a call to awake from a false sense of security, the second emphasizing that this is a spiritual battle, and the third pointing the way of victory as being in holy living.

I. Foolish Security When Surrounded by Danger (Amos 6:1-6).

Surprise attack is always effective. Satan would lull us all to sleep in the assurance that "God's in his heaven—all's well with the world." God is in heaven and it is certain that ultimately He will reign over all, but just now the world is in the hands of the Wicked One (I. John 5:19).

The people of Amos' day, to whom the message was addressed, had come to the point where prosperity had made them at ease when they should have been active, foolishly secure when they should have been sacrificially serving their fellow men who were in need. The picture is astonishingly up-to-date. Today in our own land the Gold Coast and the slums rub elbows, but few of those who have plenty are concerned about those who have not. In the eyes of most people the purpose of gaining possessions is to relieve one from the necessity of work and to enable one to evade life's responsibilities.

America needs to awaken to its dangers, and we repeat that not the least of these is the liquor question. We must either win a victory over it, or it will destroy our people.

II. Spiritual Warfare—While at Peace with God (I. Pet. 2:11, 12).

"Fleshly lusts, which war against the soul" (v. 11) are the object of serious concern on the part of every sincere Christian. There is a battle on, and the enemy of our soul knows how to make the abuse of the normal impulses and appetites of man his strong ally. The rush of modern life, the increasing use of stimulants, both natural and artificial, the very luxury in which many live, these things tend to give the flesh and its desires undue prominence, and not infrequently cause even God's children to fall into sin.

We are called to a holy warfare, but that does not mean that we live in a constant turmoil. We are, after all, pilgrims and strangers in this world. Our citizenship is in heaven (Phil. 3:20) though we live on earth. In the heart we have peace, and that enables us to fight a good fight against the world, the flesh, and the devil.

III. Doing the Will of God in a Self-willed World (I. Pet. 4:1-5).

Essentially there are two opposing principles operative in the lives of men—we either are controlled by God's will, or by self-will. The flesh is really man's personality controlled by his own self-will. It results in the kind of life described in verses 2 and 3. When a man becomes a Christian he should move over into the will of God.

Such a man may be regarded as strange, but as a matter of fact, men will recognize his godliness (see I. Pet. 2:12). Dr. Will H. Houghton tells of "a soldier who ultimately was made a Christian believer through seeing his companions make fun of another soldier, who was a believer in Christ. The thing that impressed him was the fact that though they made fun of this man, they left their money in his possession for safekeeping!" Do we have that kind of a testimony?

C. Houston Goudiss Offers Timely Advice on Keeping Children Well in Winter; Warns of Several Dangers

By C. HOUSTON GOUDISS

ONE of the ways by which her community judges a woman's success as a mother is by the health and well-being of her children. If they are energetic, rosy-cheeked normal boys and girls who have a high resistance to infections, such as the common cold, and if they display the good dispositions that we usually associate with buoyant health, then the verdict of friends and neighbors is usually that of a job well done.

To help her children maintain top health and vitality, a mother must constantly be alert to the various factors that help produce this ideal estate. And at the same time, she must likewise be on guard against the common conditions that may contribute to lowered resistance, especially fatigue and improper diet.

Winter Hazards

It has been said that in winter the body is on trial—and this is as true of children as of adults. Extremes of temperature require adjustments on the part of the body, and in most parts of the country, children are called upon constantly to switch their environment from a house which is all too frequently overheated to an outdoor temperature that may be below freezing.

While cool, outdoor air is stimulating to children in normal health, some children withstand it much less successfully. This is particularly true of those who are improperly nourished; who are over-fatigued or suffer from poor circulation.

When it is very cold outdoors, it is wise to have children come in from their play periodically to warm up. And if a child appears to suffer from the cold unduly, it is wise to have a physician check up on his health.

Guard Against Frostbite

Over-exposure must be avoided, particularly in cold, damp weather. For under these conditions, doctors warn, there is always a danger of frostbite. They say that whenever the temperature falls below 8 degrees Fahrenheit, children should not be permitted to play outdoors. If they do, the cold may act upon the tissues so that part of the body is deprived of its blood supply. This is most likely to occur in the fingers, toes, nose or ears which thereupon become frozen. The combination of wind and low temperature is especially dangerous and frostbite frequently occurs at temperatures up to 14 degrees Fahrenheit when there is a strong wind.

Mothers should be on guard against frostbite when the temperature is below 24 degrees Fahrenheit, however, and at all times during the winter, see that children are warmly clad. This need not mean that they are so bundled up as to preclude the possibility of active play. Suitable clothing consists of garments which provide warmth and protection against dampness, without constriction at any point.

Two layers of wool, such as that provided by a woolen sweater and playsuit are considered preferable to one too-bulky garment. Feet and hands should, of course, be well protected.

Don't Overheat the House

Only a little less serious are the consequences of dry, overheated indoor air. It is unfortunate that so many people keep their rooms entirely too warm in winter. This not only widens the gap between indoor and outdoor temperatures, but may be extremely irritating to the delicate membranes of the nose and throat. Most authorities consider an indoor temperature of about 68 degrees Fahrenheit satisfactory.

Is Your Child Lazy?

We often hear mothers complain that their children are lazy in cold weather . . . and they seem to have less pep and energy than in other seasons. If by that they mean that their children are less active, it may be that this can be attributed in part to the bleak, shorter days that do not always invite outdoor play. But sometimes a child displays such a reduction in his activities as to appear indolent. Then the mother must seek the physical or emotional factors that may be responsible. For true laziness suggests a body that is not functioning normally.

Quite possibly the child's diet is not meeting his bodily requirements. An undernourished child usually tires easily and is disinclined to exert himself. The food may be adequate as to quantity, but not as to quality. For example, a diet that is too highly concentrated, contains too little bulk or cellulose, may cause a tendency to faulty elimination. This, in turn, is frequently responsible for lassitude. The remedy is often a simple dietary change—the addition of a salad to the daily diet; or possibly the use of stewed dried fruits in addition to a fresh fruit or fruit juice daily. Of course, the child should also have two servings of vegetables besides potatoes, one of which should be of the green leafy variety. Also a quart of milk daily; breads and cereals, at least half of which may preferably be the whole grain variety; an egg daily or at least three or four weekly; one serving of meat, fish or chicken, and another serving of a protein food, such as cheese. Some form of vitamin D should be included in the diet of young children, especially during the winter months.

It is also most important that children follow a daily routine that includes plenty of time for sleep. And for younger children a daytime nap is usually advised.

Children Need Healthy Mothers

Mothers must give attention to the children's health. But let them give some consideration to their own. The tired, nervous mother is very apt to transfer some of her own fatigue and nervousness to her child. So in arranging your child's rest periods and diet, in looking after proper habits of elimination, make sure that Mother, too . . . and better still every member of the family . . . follows this same sound health program.

SAFETY TALKS

Rural Traffic Accidents Increase

Traffic accidents in the rural districts are mounting by leaps and bounds. Since 1924, the National Safety council says, motor vehicle fatalities have increased 172 per cent. In cities over 10,000 population they went up but 30 per cent.

Of course, the council points out, a large part of this increase may be the result of much-increased rural travel. But most traffic authorities believe, however, that the more favorable city record can be traced to the more effective traffic control measures in municipalities.

In 1937, the loss of life to traffic accidents in rural districts and cities under 10,000 population was 27,400. In cities over 10,000, there were 12,100 killed.

While collisions with pedestrians constituted the major fatal accident problem in cities, rural districts had their greatest difficulty with collisions between two or more motor vehicles.

SEWING CIRCLE

HERE'S a practical, slenderizing dress that large women will thoroughly enjoy for their busiest days of housework. And a trim little bolero frock that's gay and fresh as a spring morning, just the thing for shopping, business and general wear. They are so easy to make that even beginners will enjoy working with these easy designs—each of which includes a step-by-step sew chart.

Comfortable House Dress.

This dress is so easy to make that you'll turn out half a dozen of it in practically no time; it's a diagram design that you can complete in a few hours. And it's so easy to work in that you won't be satisfied with less than half a dozen. Wide armholes, a darted waistline that looks slim, a skirt with sufficient width, all assure freedom for action. It's easy to put on, too, as well as to iron, because it buttons down the front. Percale, calico and gingham are good materials for this.

Tailored Bolero Dress.

Even without the sleeveless bolero, this dress is a charming style for runabout and street wear. The darted waistline makes you look slim and supple. A scalloped closing, edged with braid or binding, and puff sleeves narrowed into the arm by shirring, complete the effect of youthful charm. Make this right now of flat crepe, silk print or thin wool. Then repeat it later in summer cottons; it's a design that you'll use many, many times.

No. 1615 is designed for sizes 34, 36, 38, 40, 42, 44, 46, 48 and 50. Size 36 requires 4¾ yards of 35-inch material, with ⅛ yard for cuffs in contrast.

No. 1674 is designed for sizes 12, 14, 16, 18, 20 and 40. Size 14 requires 5¼ yards of 39-inch material, with 3⅞ yards of braid to trim.

SOYBEAN OILMEAL DOES NOT EFFECT CARCASS OF CATTLE

Feeding soybean oilmeal to cattle does not alter the firmness of the carcass, reports C C Culbertson, animal husbandman at Iowa State College

Culbertson says that feeders can safely substitute the relatively cheap soybean oilmeal for the more expensive linseed oilmeal.

"Even when we fed raw soybeans in amounts greater than needed to meet the protein requirements for fattening cattle, the beans did not lower the quality of the finished carcass although the cattle made poorer gains and had less finish," Culbertson explains.

Pound for pound, soybean oilmeal is about 85 per cent as valuable as linseed meal for fattening choice quality cattle

For poor or medium quality cattle soybean oilmeal is almost equal to linseed meal as a protein feed.

There's no difference in palatability between soybean oilmeals which have a "nutty" flavor and linseed meal.

Two Victories Past Week Keeps Shamrocks In Conference Race

SHAMROCKS HAVE CHANCE FOR FIRST PLACE TIE

Woden-Crystal Lake Tilt Is Important Game In S. E. Conference

By virtue of their win over Crystal Lake Monday night, the Klemme Shamrocks stayed in the top division in the Seven Eagles Conference standings With three conference games yet to be played, the Shamrocks have a slim chance for a first place tie with Woden. Woden has two games left to play, one with Hayfield and the other with Crystal Lake If either of these two teams can bump Woden off and it seems Crystal Lake has a good chance and Klemme can win their one remainmg game with Hayfield then the top spot in the final standings will be shared by the Shamrocks and Woden However, if Woden goes through the afore mentioned games without a loss, the Shamrocks will have to be content with second place.

Anyway, there are a lot of "if's" connected with the proposition, so the only thing we can do is wait

The standings in the conference to date are as follows:

CONFERENCE STANDINGS

| | W | L | Ptc. |
|---|---|---|---|
| Woden | 7 | 1 | .875 |
| Klemme | 7 | 2 | .778 |
| Kanawha | 6 | 4 | .600 |
| Crystal Lake | 5 | 4 | .556 |
| Hayfield | 2 | 6 | .250 |
| Goodell | 0 | 10 | .000 |

SHAMROCKS TAKE THRILLER FROM CRYSTAL LAKE FIVE

Little Shamrocks Have Slight Edge To Nose Out Laker Reserves

In a game that was nip and tuck all the way the Klemme Shamrocks put on a rally in the closing minutes to put themselves out in front 23 to 21 before the final whistle. Tight defensive play by both teams was shown throughout the game and numerous fouls were called. It was on free throws that the locals had the edge on the visitors; making seven out of fifteen count, while the Lakers managed only three out of the same number of attempts.

The first quarter was spent, more or less, in feeling out the opposition's defense and the quarter found the Shamrocks holding a one-point, 4 to 3 lead. The second quarter saw a little more scoring from both sides and by the half the score stood at 11 to 9 with the locals still out in front.

Coming out for the second half the Crystal Lake five began to penetrate the Klemme defense, and the end of the third quarter saw the lead in their hands by a count of 18 to 15. In the final period things really happened. The Lakers ran the score to 20 to 15 and then, with only about four minutes left, the Shamrocks took charge. Kluckhohn cashed in on a pear of gift shots while Murray of Crystal Lake also collected a free one to make the score 21 to 17. Then Barz pushed in a couple of two-handers from out in the court to tie the score. With a little over a minute to play, Wicks took the ball and after a fast dribble, shot over a block set up by Kluckhohn and looped the winning basket.

The scoring was very evenly divided for the locals with every man in the lineup counting. Wicks had a little the best of things as he got 6 points. Barz got 5, Kluckhohn and Katter 4 each and Grosshuesch and Grange 2 each.

Swan and Volding led the Laker attack with 8 and 6 points, respectively.

The Little Shamrocks also had a tough one and after trailing 7 to 4 at the half came back to win 13 to 11. Brinkman led the scoring for the locals with 7 points, while Riherd was high for Crystal Lake with 5.

GOODELL BASKETEERS ARE LOSERS TO SHAMROCKS SECOND TIME THIS SEASON

Varsity Triumphs 35 To 23; Junior High Takes 34 To 22 Decision

Playing the Goodell cagers for the second time this season, the local basketeers grabbed a 35 to 23 victory to hand Goodell its 9th consecutive conference loss.

Both teams started slow and the score at the end of the first stanza stood at 6 to 4 in favor of the locals. The second period saw Grange leave the game on fouls and also saw the Goodell five move up to tie the score at 9 all by the end of the half. Coming out for the third quarter the Shamrocks began to click and moved up to gain a 23 to 18 lead by the end of the period. In the final quarter Boller was banished from the game on fouls and the Shamrocks scored 12 points while Goodell was scoring 5 to make the final score 35 to 23.

Katter who turned in his best performance of the season to date, led the Shamrock offensive with 12 points. Grosshuesch was not far behind with 11. Barz collected three goals and a gift shot for 7, while Kluckhohn got 4. Wicks sank a free one to make the total, and also turned in a neat job of guarding on Carolus, holding him to one field goal and a pair of charity tosses.

Boller and Peterson led the Goodell attack with 6 points apiece. Sellers and Carolus got 4 each and Drury 3.

In the curtain raiser the local Junior High team, led by Billy Grosshuesch, outscored the Goodell Juniors 34 to 22. Grosshuesch collected 12 points to lead the locals, while Conwell got 16 to lead the Goodell five.

SECTIONAL TOURNAMENTS TO GET UNDERWAY IN IOWA ON MARCH FIRST

Klemme Goes To Clarion; Will Play Williams In First Round

Sectional tournament play in Iowa's eight districts will get underway on March 1st with an all time high of 882 teams participating in the 64 sectional meets.

Diagonal, 1938 state champion, will compete in Class B at Creston and drew Benton for a first round opponent. In the same sectional is Cromwell, who has split a pair of games with the titleholders this year, so Diagonal may go no further than the sectional meet in this year's tournament play.

Going to games closer to home and consequently of more interest to local fans, we find three Seven Eagles teams playing at Clarion and three at Lake Mills.

At Clarion the Shamrocks are paired off with Williams, and Goodell drew Galt for first round opponents in Class B. Other B. teams are Blairsburg, Woolstock, Rowan and Goldfield. In Class A we find Kanawha paired off with Eagle Grove, the other A teams being Britt, Dows, Garner, Belmond and Clarion.

At Lake Mills two Seven Eagles teams get together when Crystal Lake meets Hayfield in Class B. Woden, also in Class B, drew Scarville. Other B teams are Ledyard, Rake, Titonka, Bancroft, Grant Township, Lakota and Leland.

Federal Insurance Supervision May Follow Committee Probe

By Joseph W. La Bine

EDITOR'S NOTE—When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of the news analyst, and not necessarily of the newspeper.

Business

As counsel for a New York state legislative insurance committee, Charles Evans Hughes made a name for himself in 1906 uncovering what he thought to be irregularities. The chief Hughes fear: That insurance company resources were so large as to make conservative, responsible management increasingly difficult. The Hughes remedy: Federal supervision of insurance investments.

Since 1906 Mr. Hughes has risen to the U. S. Supreme court and may have changed his mind. At least nothing has been done about it and the vast insurance fund has quadrupled. Whereas Mr. Hughes suggested limiting new policies to $150,000,000 a year per company, some now write $2,000,000,000 a year. Today there are $110,000,000,000 worth of policies in effect and insurance investments cover a surprisingly wide field. Samples: Government securities, $4,500,000,000; railroads, $3,000,000,000; farm mortgages and corporation securities, $2,000,000,000; state, county and city bonds, $1,500,000,000.

CHARLES EVANS HUGHES

If this business was worth investigating 23 years ago it is even more vulnerable today. Just started in Washington is a 12-month probe by the temporary national economic committee, headed by Wyoming's Sen. Joseph C. O'Mahoney and better known as the "monopoly investigating committee." Chiming in is William O. Douglas' Securities and Exchange commission. Pertinent question marks include (1) what influence insurance investments exert on U. S. money markets, banks, railroads, etc.; (2) how insurance executives are chosen; (3) possibility of interlocking directorates between insurance firms and utilities.

Though the monopoly committee has often reiterated that it is not hunting witches, and although Mr. Douglas maintains he only wants to bring the Hughes report up to date, there is a good chance of new legislation providing federal regulation over all interstate insurance business. This would supplement state supervision now in effect.

Adding to their discomfort is the demand by Montana's Sen. Burton K. Wheeler that insurance companies take a greater hand in helping reorganize U. S. railroads. The Wheeler charge: That present insurance company negotiations with carriers feature repeated concessions to investment bankers at the expense of bondholders. But if rail aid presents as many obstacles as insurance men claim, the probable solution of this problem will not be a federal whipping post for insurance companies but revision in the railroad reorganization statute.

Spain

The fate of Britain and France marched with Rebel Generalissimo Francisco Franco into Barcelona, tagging along as he pushed northward through the rest of Catalonia to shut off an important sector in the two and one-half year old civil war. No sooner had Loyalist President Manuel Azana fled to Paris than peace rumors began. The probability is that President Azana was ready to surrender, but not Premier Juan Negrin. His terms: (1) elimination of foreigners from Spain; (2) a plebiscite by the Spanish people to decide their future form of government; (3) no reprisals on either side. Those terms having apparently been rejected by the Insurgents, Premier Negrin prepared to fight to the finish in the large southeastern section of Spain his government still holds.

Anglo-French concern over the Spanish war may be expected to grow daily until that conflict is ended. As a last chance for peace with security, London and Paris jumped on the bandwagon for Negrin's plan, realizing these terms held a scant promise that Spain might emerge from the war as a sympathetic nation, rather than as a tool for Italy and Germany.

But it would obviously be foolhardy for the Fascist governments to accept peace with partial victory when a full victory is so near. That accomplished, France will have totalitarian neighbors on three sides (Spain, Italy, Germany) and will be ripe for plucking by Mussolini. It is significant that Italian territorial claims against France are being held up until the war is over.

But the approach of this French-Italian struggle draws Paris closer to Britain each day. Before the house of commons, British Prime Minister Neville Chamberlain has promised full military support in case France is involved in war.

Aviation

U. S. and British airliners have been hopping the Atlantic in test flights for two years, planning to start London-New York service simultaneously next summer. Last fall a reciprocal agreement was signed but the English, piqued because the U. S. refused to let Imperial airways ships land at Honolulu, shrank back in a pout. Anxious to start transatlantic service this year regardless of the British attitude, the U. S. opened negotiations with Paris and immediately arranged Paris-New York flights via the long Azores route. Meanwhile the British announced they would inaugurate independent service next June.

But the Americans showed themselves better diplomatic pilots than their English friends. Anxious lest London be left off U. S. transatlantic schedules, the British government has waived the treaty provision calling for a simultaneous start by U. S. and British planes. This clears the way for Pan-American airways ships to start between March 15 and 31. Probable settlement, now that the U. S. holds agreements with both Britain and France, is a service from New York to Paris via London.

TRANSATLANTIC CLIPPER
To London by March 31?

Already undergoing observation flights for the civil aeronautics authority is one of Pan-American's new 42-ton clipper boats, largest practical ship yet built. Carrying more than 50 passengers, complete even to a highly-publicized "bridal suite," the new clippers would make one flight a week in each direction at the start. Later, with more ships and experience, three weekly trips will be booked.

Pan-America

German trade with Brazil grew by leaps and bounds last year thanks to the barter system, ie., German purchases were paid for with "askimarks," which could be redeemed only by taking German goods in return. An upshot of December's Pan-American conference was the realization that something must be done to safeguard U. S. trade with Brazil, crowded into second place by the aggressive Reich in 1938. Just arrived in Washington is Dr. Oswaldo Aranha, Brazilian foreign minister, for conversations expected to have four significant results: (1) U. S. financial assistance to Brazil via congressional loan, credits to American merchants or stabilization of Brazilian currency; (2) redivision of the world cotton market; (3) increase of U. S. sales to Brazil; (4) examination of mutual defense problems.

Balkans

On January 13 Hungary joined the German-Italo-Jap anti-Commitern pact, undoubtedly the willing victim of Rome-Berlin pressure. Russia's unexpected retaliation was a virtual break-off in diplomatic relations with Hungary on the excuse that Budapest is now under a foreign thumb and has "lost its independence to a considerable degree."

By far the smallest significance of this step is that Russia again shows an interest in world affairs, breaking the painful silence that has kept Europe guessing since the Soviet was ignored at Munich last September. More important is the warning that Moscow will take similar action against any other nation joining the anti-Commitern pact.

Observers now wonder if the slur concerning Hungary's lost "independence" may not revive anti-Nazi sentiment in that nation and throughout the Balkans. Within a week after the Soviet's action three favorable signs could be seen:

Martial Law. Following explosion of a bomb in Budapest's largest Jewish synagogue, the nation went under military law and two influential Nazi newspapers were suspended.

Pan-Balkan. Rumania and Jugo-Slavia have signed an agreement to (1) defend their present borders; (2) adopt a "conciliatory attitude" toward all Balkan countries, and (3) improve relations with Hungary and Bulgaria, chief Nazi conformists in the Balkan area.

New Premier. At Belgrade Jugoslavia's pro-Nazi Premier Milan Stoyadinovitch resigned under pressure concerning the Croatian autonomy move, being succeeded by 46-year-old Dragisha Tsvetkovitch, labor leader and strong foe of dictatorships.

Asia

Manchukuo's Siberian border has seen repeated Russian-Jap clashes during the past five years, but not until last summer was this hostility publicized. At that time several heated skirmishes took place over Changkugeng hill (see map), now pock-marked and silent. Later, in December, Tokyo and Moscow had words over Siberian fishing waters, which Japan intends to exploit despite Soviet objections. In January several high Tokyo officials solemnly told their people to prepare for war—not only a continuation of the wearying Sino-Jap conflict but for war with Russia.

What may be the touch-off signal for this war has been reported from Mengoskili, a good 800 miles northwest of Changkufeng. There, in four days of almost continuous fighting, Japs claimed they "threw back Russian assaults." While the Soviet maintains its traditional silence except for diplomatic protests in Tokyo, Japan asserts the "assaults" were aimed to force a retreat from Russian fishing grounds. And well might Japan "throw back" any attack in Manchukuo, because foreign observers report the isolated puppet state is manned not with easy-going border guards but with veteran troops, barracked along the Siberian border to guard against the fatal day.

WAR IN MANCHUKUO

"GUNGA DIN" is one of those pictures that you simply mustn't miss. It's spectacular, thrilling, beautifully done. Maybe it isn't really a woman's picture; Joan Fontaine is the only girl in the cast, and she hasn't a really important role. But—with Douglas Fairbanks Jr., Cary Grant and Victor McLaglen in the line-up, where is the woman who is going to complain because she doesn't see lots of lovely girls in stunning clothes, or be entertained by a thrilling love story?

Sam Jaffee, whom you should remember from "Lost Horizon," has the title role, and gives one of the best performances ever seen on a motion picture screen.

Remember—you'll regret it if you don't see "Gunga Din"!

Metro is going to make a he-man out of Robert Taylor if it kills him. He takes a lot of punishment at the hands of Wallace Beery in "Stand Up and Fight" and does it so well that even the men picture-goers who have complained in the past that he was "just a pretty boy" ought to be satisfied.

Another of those elaborate historical background is being constructed in Hollywood. This time it is for "The Man in the Iron Mask," and John DuCasse Schulze, art director for Edward Small Productions, is drawing the plans.

He has put in months of research, until he feels more at home in the period of which Alexander Dumas wrote than in the present. There will be accurate reproductions of the Palaces of St. Germain-en-Laye and Versailles, of the Bastille, the streets of historic Paris and several villages.

Louis Hayward will have dual roles—those of King Louis XIV and his twin brother. Warren William will play "D'Artagnan," Joseph Schildkraut will be "Colbert" (not related to Claudette of modern times). James Whale will direct, and, if you don't mind a pun, it will be a whale of a picture.

TIPS to Gardeners

Special Gardens

MANY hobbyists get pleasure from special gardens. So have been successful with marigold, or all-petunia garden. Marigolds are available in a wide variety of sizes and shapes and provide a golden-brown garden scene of unusual richness.

Petunias have a wide range of color, and more and more they are being used for cut flowers as well as for garden color and beauty.

Some have grown gardens primarily for fragrance. The best flowers for such a garden, according to Harry A. Joy, flower expert, are: Alyssum, carnation, pink, mignonette, nicotiana, sweet pea and sweet William.

For a garden of plants with actual flowers but with showy foliage, interesting results have been obtained with the following: Joseph's coat, coleus, dusty miller, snow-on-the-mountain, annual poinsetta, kochia and castor bean.

The following will fit well in a typical wildflower garden; annual lupin, bachelor button, physostegia (cone flower), columbine, perennial aster, heuchera (coral bells), and perennial lupin.

Beauty Aids Not Intended For Children

By PATRICIA LINDSAY

MANY mothers write asking such questions as these:

"Do you believe in permanent waves for young children?"

"My child has a very pale face. When she goes to parties should I rouge her cheeks?"

"My young daughter likes colored nail polish. She is only nine. Should I let her wear it?"

And once in a while I get a question which makes me gasp—"I want my child, who is now five years old, to have a perfect complexion when she grows up. Should I give her a facial once a week at a beauty parlor?"

Of course, my answer to all of those questions is "No—Definitely no."

A child should be allowed to grow into its adult, unhampered. Her tender hair can be ruined with intense heat and harmful lotions; her skin can be marred for life by creams which were made for aging beauty, not virgin beauty; and how horrible to look at a young child with lacquered nails or rouged cheeks!

If you wish your child to grow into a beauty be watchful over the fundamentals of a healthy body and mind. See that she is fed the foods that will nourish her. Foods that will strengthen her tiny bones and teeth. Foods that will keep her skin fresh as a dew-kissed petal.

Brush the darling's hair regularly, away from the scalp with a brush that is kept sterilized and used for her very own. Keep her scalp clean, free from rashes and dandruff. Try to discover a natural wave in her hair, and press it between your fingers while it is damp to encourage its curl.

Self Neglect Never Justified

What mother failed to do was this. She neglected herself in order to shower daughter with much—much she didn't need. When daughter was at the going-out age, she saw other mothers who were attractive, who could speak on current topics and books, who were more or less companionable to their own daughters. By comparison her mother fell short. Didn't she? Yes, the doting mother failed to keep modern. Her offspring outshines her.

What these disappointed mothers could do, now that their daughters have grown, is to spend much more time thinking about themselves! Buy some new clothes, get a hair-do and a few beauty treatments and the budget will stand for them by crossing out daughter's ordinary provisions! Those will restore self-respect.

To restore self-assurance get active in something, preferably local, which will bring you out of the home into social activity. Read books, magazines, go to movies. Develop a personality—because you have drowned yours in your daughter's. Don't blame her. She is young and youth is ruthless! Win your own self esteem back and it will not be long before people will be saying, "Alice should be attractive and talented, just look at her mother!"

HINT-OF-THE-DAY

Be Kind to Tender Skins

Plain soap and water is the most reliable of all skin cleansers, but there are some skins that do not react satisfactorily to this method of cleaning.

Some women find that when they use soap and water on the face there is a tendency to dryness and itching. Sometimes a slight rash will appear for a day or so.

Women whose skins react in this manner should avoid standing under the shower, and even for the tub bath it is advisable to cover the face and neck with a cream or vaseline. A generous coat of vaseline will repel all steam and water. When soap and water are used, it should be at a time when there is no irritation. The water should be tepid, never hot.

Use a wash cloth or complexion brush to wash well around the nose and mouth, as well as the face and neck. After a few moments remove the soap with cool water using, cover the face and neck with towel and pat dry.

Then apply a good smooth cleansing cream—one with a good oil base, for never the vanishing cream, which often has an alkali or soap base. After removing the cleansing cream, use a good tissue cream.

Eighteenth Century Ice Cream

The famous Josiah Wedgwood, English ceramic maker of the eighteenth century, listed "ice cream cups" again and again on his price cards, showing that even at that day this dessert was known. In fact, a recipe for making it was printed in 1669. Fruits, sugar, and cream combined were placed in an open pot, packed with ice and "bay salt," and frozen, much as we freeze ice cream. Washington, Jefferson, and Madison are known to have served it at social functions in this country by the end of the eighteenth century.

Recall English Immigrant Boy Who Became a Great American

Edward Dickinson Baker Held High Office in Three States of the Union, Became Known as "One of the Greatest Orators of Modern Times," Served Gallantly in Three Wars and Finally Gave His Life in Defense of the Country of His Adoption.

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

FEBRUARY 24 is the anniversary of the birth of a great American who, paradoxically, was not an American at all—at least, not by birth. He was born in England, but he held high office in three states of the Union, wore the American uniform in three of our wars and finally gave his life in defense of the country of his adoption.

They called him "A Modern Knight Errant," for he was a very gallant and courageous soldier. They called him "The Gray Eagle" because of his "long, gray hair, eyes of fire, noble forehead and finely chiseled features." He has been described as "one of the greatest public speakers of modern times" and they said of one of his speeches that it was "the most eloquent delivered by an American since Patrick Henry closed with his immortal 'Give me Liberty or give me death!'"

His name was Edward Dickinson Baker.

Baker was the son of an English Quaker and his wife who lived on the Isle of Wight. Later the family moved to London and there a son was born on February 24, 1811. He was named Edward Dickinson Baker in honor of one of his uncles, a British naval officer who fought at the Battle of Trafalgar. Another of his uncles was Lord Somerville.

When the boy was five years old the Baker family moved to Philadelphia, the "City of Brotherly Love" founded by the Quaker, William Penn. There the father died while Edward was still a boy and he supported himself and his younger brother by working as a weaver. When they grew to young manhood, the two brothers emigrated to Illinois where Edward Baker began the study of law in the little town of Springfield on the Sangamon.

There the 20-year-old lawyer met Southern-born Mary Ann Lee, a 23-year-old widow with two children. They married in 1831. The next year Baker left his bride to march away to war—as a volunteer in the Illinois troops raised to resist the "invasion" by Chief Black Hawk and his Sac and Foxe warriors. Although he had no opportunity to distinguish himself in that brief and inglorious "war," Baker did form a friendship which was to be an important factor in his later career. It was with a tall, gangling militia captain from New Salem named Abraham Lincoln.

"Abe" and "Ned."

Five years later these two friends—"Abe" and "Ned" they called each other—were both serving in the Illinois legislature at Vandalia as Whig representatives and from that time on their careers were closely linked. With Stephen Logan, they were leaders in a little group, known as the "Springfield Junto," which dominated Whig party councils in Illinois.

After serving one term in the legislature, Lincoln retired to his law practice in Springfield, but Baker rose a step higher by being elected to the state senate in 1840. Four years later the two friends were rivals for the Whig nomination for representative in congress and Baker was the successful candidate. He defeated his Democratic opponent in the election, thereby becoming the only Whig congressman from Illinois. Two years later "Abe" Lincoln took his seat beside "Ned" Baker in the lower house of congress. When Lincoln's second son was born in 1846, he named him Edward Baker Lincoln in honor of his friend.

By this time the United States was on the verge of a war with Mexico. Baker immediately returned to Illinois, making the trip in the record time of six days, raised a regiment of volunteers and marched to the Rio Grande. When congress assembled Colonel Baker obtained a leave of absence, hastened to Washington and appeared on the floor of congress in full uniform (the only case on record up to that time) where he made a plea for money and men.

Baker Goes to War.

He entreated the partisans in congress to cease their "mutual criminations and recriminations." "What matters differences of opinion about the origin of the war?" he pleaded. "Send our soldiers aid, comfort, succor and support. Action! Action!! ACTION!!!!" He secured action, resigned from congress two days later, overtook his regiment on the march from Vera Cruz and fought with distinction in every engagement on the route to Mexico City. When Gen. James Shields, leader of the Illinois troops, was wounded at the Battle of Cerro Gordo, Baker became commander of the brigade and led it during the remainder of the war.

Returning to Illinois at the close of the conflict, Baker moved to Galena. According to one story, he did this so he would not be a candidate for re-election to congress against his old friend, "Abe" Lincoln. If that is true, it was an unnecessary gesture, for Lincoln realized that his constituents were dissatisfied with his record in congress and declined to make the race again. Baker was re-elected in 1848, but, becoming interested in the project of a railroad across the Isthmus of Panama, he declined a renomination in 1850.

Baker moved to California in 1851 and soon became a leader of the bar in that state. One of his most famous cases was the defense of Charles Cora, an Italian gambler who had killed General Richardson, United States marshal. Baker's address to the jury, "brilliant, eloquent, impassioned," won an acquittal for his client, but it also led to Baker's social ostracism for a time by some of the "better citizens."

When the new Republican party was organized Baker became a member and candidate for the Republican nomination for United States senator. He won the nomination but lost the election, partly because of the prejudice against him as a result of the Cora case. Then word came from Oregon that a Republican leader was needed there and he moved to that new state.

Elected to Senate.

In the campaign of 1860 he was elected to the senate by a coalition of Republican and Douglas Democrats. But his greatest victory during this campaign was to carry Oregon and California for his old friend "Abe" Lincoln, candidate for President. In Oregon Lincoln won by only 300 votes, in California by only 614 and the fact that he won at all was a tribute to the eloquence of Baker.

When Lincoln was inaugurated, it was Baker who introduced him to the throng of people gathered in front of the capital—an honor which no one else sought at a time when sedition filled the air and there was even danger of assassination. Taking his seat in the senate, Baker became the most effective orator and leader in supporting Lincoln's administration in dealing with the problem of secession of the southern states.

When Fort Sumter was fired upon, he went to New York to deliver an address in Union square on April 20, 1861, and thrilled the immense crowd there with his appeal for the preservation of the Union.

He did not remain in the senate long, however. For the "Gray Eagle," old war-horse that he was, wanted action. Lincoln offered him a commission as brigadier-general but he declined it and asked only to be made colonel of a regiment which he would raise. Although the men were recruited in New York and Philadelphia, it was called the First California, in honor of the state of his adoption. During the time he was raising this outfit, he again appeared on the floor of congress in his uniform, thus giving him the distinction of being "the only man ever to address both houses of congress in uniform."

"Father" Baker.

Finally his regiment was ready for service and he led it to Fortress Monroe. His paternal appearance and kindness to his men, although he remained a good disciplinarian, won for him another nickname by his men—"Father" Baker. His career in the army was almost as short as had been his service in the senate. At the Battle of Ball's Bluff on October 21, 1861, he was in command of a brigade and, exposing himself to the hottest fire, fell mortally wounded while leading a charge.

They took his body back to his adopted state of California and buried it in the famous Lone Mountain cemetery. Years later it was moved to the Presidio burial ground near San Francisco's Golden Gate and his grave will be a shrine for thousands of Americans who attend the exposition there this year.

Among the many eloquent speeches made by Baker there are three which are outstanding. One, known as the "American theater speech," was delivered in San Francisco in 1860 and is credited with swinging California for Lincoln in the crucial election in that year. In it he said in part:

"We live in a day of light. We live in an advancing generation. We live in the presence of the whole world. We are like a city set on a hill, that cannot be hid. The prayers and tears and hopes and sighs of all good men are with us, of us, for us.

"As for me, I dare not, I will not, be false to freedom. Here, many years long gone, I took my stand, and where in youth my feet were planted, there my manhood and my age shall march. I am not ashamed of freedom. I know her power. I glory in her strength. I rejoice in her majesty. I will walk beneath her banner.

"I have seen her again and again struck down on a hundred chosen fields of battle. I have seen her friends fly from her. I have seen her foes gather around her. I have seen them bind her to the stake. I have seen them give her ashes to the winds, regathering them that they might scatter them yet more widely. But when they turned to exult I have seen her again meet them face to face, clad in complete steel and brandishing in her strong right hand a flaming sword red with insufferable light."

"Talking Like a God."

Of the demonstration which followed, a historian writes:

"Cheer after cheer rolled from side to side, from pit to dome. Even the reporters were swept away in the frenzy and left their desks and tables to fall in with the shouting multitude. A young fellow just come of age—afterward famous as Bret Harte—leaped upon the stage and frantically waved an American flag.

"Another reporter ran out into the street gesticulating wildly and cried: 'Come in! Come in! The old man is talking like a god!'"

Almost as famous as this California speech that "left its imprint upon the history of the West," was the speech which he delivered in Union square, New York, on April 20, 1861. It began:

"The majesty of the people is here today to sustain the majesty of the constitution, and I come, a wanderer from the far Pacific, to record my oath along with yours of the great Empire state."

Further along in the speech he uttered these often-quoted words:

"Fellow citizens, what is this country? Is it the soil on which we tread? Is it the gathering of familiar faces? Is it our luxury, and pomp, and pride? Nay, more than these, is it power, and might and majesty alone?

"No, our country is more, far more than all these. The country which demands our love, our courage, our devotion, our heart's blood, is more than all these. Our country is the history of our fathers—our country is the tradition of our mothers—our country is past renown—our country is present pride and power—our country is future hope and destiny—our country is greatness, glory, truth, constitutional liberty—above all, freedom forever! These are the watchwords under which we fight; and we will shout them out till the stars appear in the sky, in the stormiest hour of battle."

A Pledge to Fight.

The address closed thus:

"And if from the far Pacific a voice feebler than the feeblest murmur upon its shore may be heard, to give you courage and hope in the contest, that voice is yours today. And if a man whose hair is gray, who is well-nigh worn out in the battle and toil of life, may pledge himself on such an occasion and in such an audience, let me say, as my last word, that when amid sheeted fire and flame I saw and led the hosts of New York as they charged in contest on a foreign soil for the honor of the flag, so again, if Providence shall will it, this feeble hand shall draw a sword never yet dishonored, not to fight for honor on a foreign soil, but for country, for home, for law, for government, for constitution, for right, for freedom, for humanity—and in the hope that the banner of my country may advance, and wheresoever that banner waves there glory may pursue and freedom be established."

The third of Baker's greatest speeches was delivered in the United States senate in reply to Senator Judah P. Benjamin of Louisiana (who, like Baker, was English-born and an American by adoption), who claimed that the southern states had the right to secede from the Union. To this claim Baker hurled defiance in these words:

"I deny that this union is a compact between sovereign states at all . . . There is but one sovereign and that is the people. The state government is its creation; the federal government is its creation; each supreme in its sphere; each sovereign for its purpose; but each limited in its authority, and each dependent upon delegated power."

FRIENDSHIP

Who is it who has so many friends that he cares not for another? There are very few, if any, of us who would not like to add another friend to our list.

One good way to win the friendship of others it to be a friend of theirs. This is sometimes difficult to do, as they probably don't care to be a friend of yours. However, we must continue to return good for evil until finally our enemies become our friends. It is sometimes astonishing how quickly an enemy may become a friend.

Don't plan revenge for the kid down the street who gave you a "shiner" because you may get another, and any such action would be contrary to the Golden Rule. In some cases the best thing to do is to forgive and forget.

We have the great problem of friendly relations in our world today. One nation drags down the other and receives the same treatment in return. The hatred lingers through the years and at certain intervals peace and friendship are blown up by war and revenge. I doubt if in this world there will be a time when everyone will be a friend of man.

So live in such a way that you will want others to treat you as you have treated them.—LaRayne Stille.

BLOW 'EM UP and BUST 'EM NEWS of the WEEK
by

Cecil Katter was in a very embarassing position when the seniors had a class meeting the other day to talk over plans to go to Mason City to have their pictures taken. Of course, Prof. not knowing Cecil had gone the day before, asked if he was driving Saturday. Cecil's face turned red, and Prof. didn't need an answer to know that Cecil already had his taken.

Mr. Kingery was put in a very embarassing position the other day when a loud noise was heard in the hall. He rushed to the door with the demerit list, only to find a salesman giving a demonstration with a talking machine.

A couple of the Senior girls were wondering how much their pictures would resemble Lean Fry. The boys all complimented Robert Taylor.

charges alone are more than five times the cost of all county administrative and clerical offices.

OBJECTIVE

To stop this growing total and to cut it back if humanly possible is the objective of 158 serious and conscientious legislators now in session in Des Moines. An administration pledged to drastic economies and reductions lends its support to the legislature in an honest effort to reduce taxes and expenditures. But it is no easy task and the demands for new and additional financial outlay are perplexing a legislature and administration which has already been described as "economy-minded." Many bills designed to reduce costs by the elimination of unecessary bureaus and commissions, and the consolidation of others, have reached the legislature but among them are many, perhaps fifty, which would add costs to state or local governments Some of them would add but little, others considerable It has been pointed out that there are three ways to reduce taxes; not to buy something, buy less of it or pay less for it. As C Fred Porter, Acting State Comptroller remarks wryly, "the only just tax is paid by the other fellow"

FEDERAL LUBRICANTS

There has, of course, been a lot of water run under the bridges since last July but the Executive Council is not going to allow any more of it to run through state-owned automobiles with consequent rises in replacements of these cars. Harry Vickers, Commissioner of Motor Vehicles, advised the Executive Council a few days ago that "somebody" in the department last year purchased 5,000 gallons of motor oil "which is absolutely no good and runs through the cars like water." Even though the state highway chemist reported last July that the oil was unsatisfactory, it continued in use until Vickers put a stop to it. Vickers says the oil came from a company known as Federal Lubricants at Sioux City. Other departments are to be checked on purchases from this company and somewhere along the line the question as to just "who is Federal Lubricants" will be answered.

SALUTE

The Eighth Iowa Cavalry cantered across deliberations of the House and Senate a few days ago when a resolution was passed returning a flag which disappeared from its staff over the state capitol of Alabama in 1865. The "Republic Of Alabama" banner found its way into the Iowa Historical department in 1892 Representative James A Lucas, Bedford Republican, said the flag was presented by a 'man named Koons of the Eighth Iowa Cavalry" Since that unit was in Alabama in 1864 Lucas said "you can draw your own conclusions as to how the flag came into Koons' hands." One can draw conclusions as to how the flag came into Koons' hands." One can draw conclusions. One can almost see a group of boisterous young Iowans cantering down a dusty street; hear the rattle of chains and the creak of saddles, and the shout when the banner was first seen floating above the Alabama capitol building. And then, more than half a century later, Lucas went on, infantrymen of the 165th Alabama and the 168th Iowa fought side by side in France in the famous Rainbow Division. The return of the flag somehow resembles a hearty handshake.

MEMORIAL DAY

And as Iowa salutes her sister state, Alabama, in return of the state flag mentiooned in the foregoing paragraph, Senators John P. Berg of Cedar Falls and Charles B. Hoeven of Alton, have presented a bill designed to place an American flag upon the grave of every Iowa veteran each Memorial Day. The bill would permit cities, counties and other political subdivisions to make appropriations from the general fund to assist in financing Memorial Day observance Cities above 75,000 population could appropriate up to $300; 25,000 to 75,000 a sum not to exceed $200; 5,000 to 25,000, $100 and cities under 5,000 could provide $50. Counties, irrespective of population, cemeteries outside city limits (except city owned) could appropriate not to exceed $300. The money would be used to decorate graves of veterans including war nurses.

MORE FARMS

Evidently designed to make many little farms out of a few big ones, a bill introduced into the House of Representatives by Representative Gus Alesch (Dem) of Marcus would increase taxation on farm land holdings of more than 640 acres. A graduated tax is suggested which would add two per cent to the regular tax on the first 80 acres above 640. This extra tax would mount as the number of acres increased until it reached 100 per cent on the fourteenth 80 acres above the first 640. The graduated tax would apply to farm lands owned by individuals, firms, corporations and associations. The funds thus collected would be allocated to school districts upon the basis of the number of students between the ages of five and twenty-one years of age living in the district.

MINERS AND COAL

Iowa coal miners and Iowa coal will earn a deserved preference in the state if the legislature acts favorable upon the bills now on file. One bill contemplates repair of land ruined by strip mining by the imposition of a tonnage tax. Miners supporting this bill say that coal can be obtained from strip mines 400 per cent cheaper than from shafts but that it ruins good land for agricultural purposes. Another bill has been introduced which would require definite qualifications for coal miners and provide for the issuance of certificates of competence; practically a licensing measure. A third bill gives Iowa coal preference in state use.

TAG ENDS

Secretary of Agriculture Mark G. Thornburg has appointed Dr. G. H. Sharp of Montezuma and Dr. F. B. Wilson of Guthrie Center as district veterinarians . . . . . Dr. R. G. Moore of Dunlap . . . . Thornburg, by the way, would like to have accompanied the Alabama flag home . . . . . he soldiered in Montgomery during the World War . . . . . here's a question Governor Wilson can't answer—what time is it? . . . . . the only hour that is significant to him is 8:00 a. m. . . . . State Treasurer Bagley would like to trade three shiny brass spittoons for what have you . . . . . Can former Governor Kraschel have those two $9 ash trays . . . . . he has them hasn't he? . . . . . Rep. H S. Love (Rep) of Adair has introduced a bill to refund gas taxes to counties . . . . . opponents claim it would divert $500,00 from the primary road fund . . . . . lots of people know the purpose of former Sec'y of State O'Brien's $134 in phone calls . . . . . but they'd like to hear him explain in his own words . . . . . "book accounts, bills receivable, credits carried, held or controlled by any branch or agency of any firm or corporation not organized under the laws of Iowa" would be classified as moneys and credits for taxation purposes and would be assessed at the location of the branch or agency . . . . .

The Safety Sensation of 1939!
Firestone CHAMPION
The Only Tire Made with the NEW SAFETY-LOCK CORD BODY and NEW GEAR-GRIP TREAD...

EVER before in our experience has a tire with such instant and unanimous approval as the new Firestone Champion Tire. It's the Safety Sensation of 1939! Our customers have started a word-of-mouth campaign that is making this the biggest tire we've ever had. Motor car manufacturers have been so impressed with its superior performance that they have adopted it for their 1939 models.

Why? Because the Firestone Champion Tire is an entirely new development in safety engineering.

Stronger Cord Body. This is accomplished first, by the use of a completely new type of tire cord called "Safety-Lock," in which the rayon fibers are more compactly twisted to assure cooler running and provide greater strength. Then, the cords in each individual cord, the cords in each ply and the plies themselves, are all securely locked together by a new and advanced process of Gum-Dipping which provides amazingly greater strength. And greater strength means greater safety.

More Non-Skid Mileage. The new Safety-Lock cord construction provides the extra strength needed for the use of wider, thicker, tougher, deeper Firestone Gear-Grip tread which delivers remarkably longer non-skid mileage. This exclusive new tread is called "Gear-Grip" because of its scientific design — it has more than 3,000 sharp-edged angles to grip the road with a sure-footed hold to protect against skidding and assure a safe stop.

Drive in today and equip your car with a new set of Firestone Champion Tires — the only tires made that are approved on the speedway for your protection on the highway.

LOUIS MEYER
Only Three-Time Winner Annual Indianapolis 500-Mile Race
Champion race drivers, whose lives and chances of victory depend on tire safety, know tire construction and that is why they select and buy Firestone Tires for their cars.

Firestone LIFE PROTECTOR the Tire within a Tire
This amazing new Firestone development makes a blowout as harmless as a slow leak.

Should a blowout occur the exclusive Firestone Safety-Valve holds sufficient air in the inner compartment to support the car until it is brought to a safe stop.

PETER IN SAMARIA

LESSON TEXT—Acts 8:14-25.
GOLDEN TEXT—Come ye, buy, and eat; yea, come, buy wine and milk without money and without price.—Isaiah 55:1.

Commercialism certainly should have no place in the Christian Church. But in an age that will even commercialize a man's love for his mother, it is small wonder that the great holy days of the Church—Christmas and Easter—have become the special object of profit-seeking purveyors of everything from hats to whisky. New Year's day, Thanksgiving day, Mother's day, Father's day, any day at all, becomes just another opportunity to take a man's money, waste his time, and possibly to destroy his soul. It is high time that intelligent folk make effective protest against such perversion of sacred things.

The Scripture lesson for today tells of one who went so far as to try to buy the power of God for money, that he might use it to get gain for himself, failing to realize that the power of God is a gift and to be used only for His glory.

I. Spiritual Power—the Gift of God (vv. 14-17).

The Holy Spirit who is the third person of the blessed Trinity had called Philip, a layman, and sent him forth to preach in Samaria. Men and women were converted, and when the church at Jerusalem heard of it, they sent Peter and John to give counsel and help to the new converts. Through the laying on of hands these received the gift of the Holy Spirit even as we now receive Him the moment we believe on Christ.

What a glorious truth it is that the believer is indwelt by the Holy Spirit (I Cor. 6:19). Thus even the humblest believer has in Him the One who redeems man, gives grace for holy living, and empowers for service. The greatest power in all the world is consequently available to every true and yielded believer. Gone then are all excuses for weak and careless living. Gone is every ground for claiming that one cannot serve God. The power and grace are His, and He gives them to His followers as a gift. Christian friend, are you giving the Holy Spirit of God liberty to infill and use you as He will?

II. Spiritual Power—Not for Sale (vv. 18-24).

Men who put their trust in money are prone to think that one can buy anything. They say with Walpole, "Every man has his price." But they are wrong. There are men and women in the world who cannot be bought, and it is even more certain that the best things that life can give a man have no price tag on them—a mother's love, friendship, fellowship with God, the Holy Spirit's power—these among many others are not for sale.

Simon, a professed believer, recognized that these followers of Jesus had a great power which he thought to buy for his own business as a magician. His was a very gross and blatant effort to do what many have done in the Church, and are doing today, by more skillful and sometimes by under-cover methods. There are those who by holding the purse strings seek to control the message of the preacher, or who use their financial influence to obtain control of church organizations and institutions. Their efforts are doomed to ultimate failure, but the present harm they do to the cause of Christ is appalling. Many a church and pastor would be far better off if they could rise up and say with Peter, "Thy money perish with thee."

III. Spiritual Power—for Testimony (v. 25).

Peter and John set the Samaritan believers a good example by permitting the Spirit of God to use them to testify and preach the Word of the Lord in many villages. The Holy Spirit does "not speak of himself," but guides the believer "in all truth" (John 16:13), and His primary ministry is to glorify Christ (John 16:14). It follows that the outstanding mark of a Spirit-born and Spirit-filled believer is his desire to speak of and to glorify Christ.

Such a testimony will be "not in words which man's wisdom teacheth, but which the Holy Ghost teacheth" (I Cor. 2:13), and will bear fruit for eternity.

A Common Adversary

Much contempt and hatred towards erring humanity would be averted — and instead compassion would be excited—if we kept constantly in mind the thought that we have the same common adversary! Indeed, such realization would elicit prayer in lieu of caustic criticism.

The Word Chance

By the word chance we merely express our ignorance of the cause of any fact or effect—not that we think that chance was itself the cause.—Henry Fergus

What to Eat and Why

C. Houston Goudiss Gives Some Timely Hints on How to Keep Up Fuel Value of Winter Diet; Discusses New Methods for Quick Baking

By C. HOUSTON GOUDISS

MIDWINTER weather calls for energizing breakfasts to get the day off to a good start . . . energizing midday meals to help keep children and adults functioning efficiently . . . energizing, but easily digested, evening meals to satisfy bodily requirements without over-taxing the digestive system.

In addition to the need for supplying meals that are adequate as to energy values and other nutritional requirements, the homemaker has two other important factors to consider; she must satisfy the appetites of various members of her family . . . and she must keep within her food budget.

Breadstuffs—The Staff of Life

One of her greatest aids is bread in various forms. Breadstuffs, or other foods made from grain, are undoubtedly the largest single item in the dietary of the majority of people throughout the world. They appear in some form at almost every meal. And they are also highly satisfactory as a between-meal lunch for rapidly growing school children.

Breadstuffs are notable for their energy values and for their ease of digestion. They contain some protein and minerals, and under some circumstances, they may also carry other significant food values.

Bread and rolls combine well with milk, cheese, butter and meat. They make good eating and give a comfortable feeling of satisfaction afterwards. Such simple combinations as bread and cheese, or rolls and milk, are highly effective in satisfying hunger. And they go a long way toward meeting nutritional requirements.

A Notable Food Team

Nutritionists have a high regard for the combination of bread and milk. Breadstuffs are generally regarded as a most economical source of energy and protein in the diet. Milk is our most nearly perfect food. And the proteins of milk supplement those found in the grains of which bread and rolls are made.

Children especially should consume some form of bread, toast, or well-baked rolls at every meal. These easily digested foods supply the fuel values that most active youngsters require in abundance. Rolls and bread with a well-baked crust have the additional advantage of encouraging thorough mastication.

During adolescence, the energy requirements are especially high. Boys sometimes eat more than their fathers, and it is desirable that the extra calories be provided in the form of such easily digested and wholesome foods as breadstuffs. This is also an advantage to the homemaker, from the point of view of economy, as breadstuffs rank as one of our most reasonably priced foods. Adolescent girls, on the other hand, frequently develop finicky appetites and strange food habits. They may wish to go to school without breakfast—a practice which must be discouraged as it may lead to undernutrition from which "nerves" may develop.

Adolescents Like Variety

One way to help growing girls to be energetic is to encourage them to eat some form of bread at every meal. This will help to keep up the fuel value of the diet at very little expense.

Mothers must, however, guard against loss of interest in breadstuffs by various members of their families, as a result of monotony. Luckily, there is no reason why this should occur in any home. For it is possible to provide breadstuffs in such a variety that the same kind need not be served twice in succession within the space of one or two weeks.

You can add variety to the diet by preparing bread from graham, whole wheat or rye flour. Rolls can be made from plain or sweet dough. Some of the more popular are Parker House rolls, sandwich rolls, finger rolls, cinnamon buns, butterscotch rolls and pecan rolls.

A New Leavening Agent

Some homemakers may feel that it is too costly to purchase such fancy breads outside the home. And they may feel that they cannot spare the time required for home baking. Such arguments might have been valid in the past. But not any more!

Recently a new kind of yeast has been developed which makes it possible to prepare a variety of hot breads at home—more quickly than ever before. Thus, home baking follows the trend of the times and becomes quick-baking.

One reason why modern homemakers have been reluctant to make bread and rolls at home, I believe, has been the difficulty of obtaining a leavening agent that was both quick-acting and possessed good keeping qualities.

Yeast is the most satisfactory leavening agent for bread and rolls. Heretofore, only two types had been available. Fresh, or compressed yeast, and dried yeast. Both of these products are composed of yeast plants combined with cereal.

Fresh yeast has a higher moisture content, however, and because of this, spoils rapidly. Hence, it must be purchased fresh, kept well refrigerated, and used within a few days. Dry yeast keeps several weeks at room temperature and has, therefore, been regarded as more practical. Its great disadvantage has been that it acts less quickly, owing to the fact that some of the yeast plants are destroyed during the drying.

Keeps and Is Quick-Acting

But nowadays homemakers can buy a new kind of yeast. A new, fast, pure yeast that combines the keeping qualities of dry yeast with speedy action.

This product is a dry yeast that comes in the form of small granules. It softens promptly in water, and is then ready for use. Moreover, it keeps its strength and activity for several weeks, so that it can be kept on hand at all times.

Homemakers can bake whenever it is convenient. And what delicious bread and rolls they can make. Such wholesome combinations as prune bread, combining both white and whole wheat flour with seeded, uncooked prunes . . . refrigerator rolls, coffee cakes, raisin bread, wholesome raised doughnuts, waffles and buckwheat cakes.

It cannot be denied that bread is one of the oldest foods known to man. But just to prove that even our most basic foods may be improved—along comes this revolutionary yeast to provide a leavening that is more satisfactory than ever before, perhaps, to homemakers all over the country.

HOW to SEW

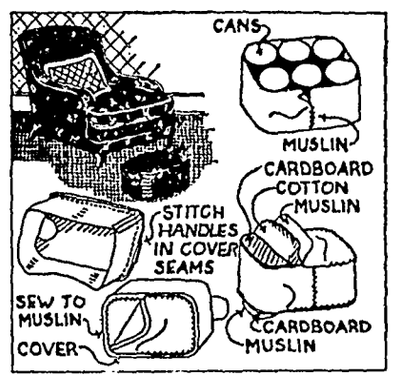
By RUTH WYETH SPEARS



THE other day a letter came with an unusual request. "I have made so many useful things by just following the pictures in your Book 1—SEWING, for the Home Decorator; and Book 2—Gifts, Novelties and Embroidery; I wonder if you could tell me some way to use empty cans?"

Fortunately we have a very long memory. There came to life the picture of a fat little girl sitting on a small footstool in a very Victorian parlor while her Great Aunt rocked and visited. And there was something about that footstool—yes it had cans inside. The cans were filled with sand to make the footstool heavy. The cover was red carpet with handles of the carpet material at the ends. So we saved six cans. We substituted a piece of upholstery material for carpet, and here is a step-by-step sketch of the footstool we made. It is a great success.

Now is the time to give your house a fresh start. Crisp new curtains; a bright slipcover; new lampshades; or an ottoman will do the trick. Make these things yourself. Mrs. Spears' Book 1—SEWING, for the Home Decorator, shows you how with step-by-step, easy to follow sketches. Book 2—Gifts, Novelties and Embroidery will give you a new interest for long winter evenings. It contains complete directions for making many useful things. Books are 25 cents each. If you order both books, a crazy-quilt leaflet is included FREE; it illustrates 36 authentic embroidery stitches in detail. Address Mrs. Spears, 210 S. Desplaines St., Chicago, Ill.

Little Man Found More Trials Were to Come

A big man and a little man were having an argument on the bank of a canal. They got very hot about it. At last, the big man said, "I could pick you up and throw you across the cut."

The little man replied: "You couldn't. I bet you a dollar you couldn't."

The big man said, "Done," picked him up, whirled him round, and pitched him right into the middle.

The little man scrambled out, and said: "Where's my dollar?"

The other replied: "Dollar be blowed. I'm going to do it if I stay here all day."

SEED TREATING CENTER AVAILABLE TO FARMERS OF HANCOCK COUNTY

A few cents spent in treating small grain seed for disease and cleaning it to remove weed seeds may mean many dollars in added revenue at threshing time, according to T. C. Petersen, county agent.

Seed borne diseases of small grains such as oat smut, covered smut of barley, barley stripe and stinking smut of wheat can effectively be controlled by dusting with Ceresan, declares John Standen, extension plant pathologist at Iowa State College.

Seed treatment does not prevent rusts and does not control one type of loose smut on barley, but it does control most other smuts and protects the plants against seedling blight or "damping off." Cleaning the seed helps in both disease and weed control.

Twenty-five elevators in Iowa operated seed cleaning and treating equipment last year, Standen reports. Fifty more elevators have signified their intention of making similar equipment available this season.

The nearest place to which Hancock County farmers can take their grain for cleaning and treating is the Northern Iowa Experimental Station at Kanawha.

The usual charge for treating is 3 to 4 cents per bushel and for cleaning 2 to 3 cents per bushel.

WRIGHT COUNTY LEAGUE CONCLUDES SUCCESSFUL YEAR

The Wright County Conservation League has just concluded a year's program which stamps it as one of the most active of this state's conservation organizations. This club with a paid membership of more than 900 has been active in a variety of activities during the past year.

Activities during the past year included a pheasant rearing project, construction of several dams, operation of a fish rearing pond at Eagle Grove, assistance in fish rescue work and the sponsoring of a boat race that attracted several thousand persons to Morris Lake. In addition, the organization has kept a motion picture record of its activities.

John J. Henneberry of Eagle Grove is the retiring president of the organization and his duties will be taken over during the coming year by Jack Weber of Clarion.

Klemme Shamrocks Must Win Over Hayfield To Tie In Conference Race

CONFERENCE APT TO END IN TWO-WAY TIE

Woden Now In Front By One Game; Klemme Has Hayfield Go Yet

The Seven Eagles Conference race this year has been full of upsets, and one of the most surprising of these came last Thursday night when Hayfield nosed out the top-notch Woden five 29 to 27 on the latter's floor. This unsuspected victory by Hayfield pushed the leaders back a game and tied them for first place with the Klemme Shamrocks.

However, Saturday night, Woden defeated Crystal Lake 28 to 21 and again stepped out in front by a one-game margin.

On Friday, March 10, the Shamrocks will journey to Hayfield and play the last game on the conference schedule. If they win, the race for supremacy in the Seven Eagles Conference will end in a tie between them and Woden. But, if they lose, it's all off as far as the Shamrocks are concerned and they will have to take second place in the final standings.

The standings to date are as follows:

| | W | L | Ptc. |
|---|---|---|---|
| Woden | 8 | 2 | .800 |
| Klemme | 7 | 2 | .778 |
| Kanawha | 6 | 4 | .600 |

PATRON OF AVERY THEATRE WINS IN NATIONAL CONTEST

Chas. Marks, manager of the Avery Theatre at Garner announced Monday evening that Mrs. R. A. Jorgenson, Klemme, was one of the winners in the national Movie Quiz Contest, of which the Avery Theatre was one of the sponsors. $250,000 was awarded and the prizes ranged from $50,000 down to $10, or a total of 5,404 prizes. First place was won by a lady in San Francisco.

Mr. Marks stated that over two and a half million persons entered the contest and complimented Mrs. Jorgenson for having won a prize in that large field of contestants. In the $10 division there were awarded 5,000 prizes, and above that number only 404 received major prizes of $100 and up.

BROTHER OF KLEMME MAN KILLED IN ACCIDENT

P. W. Johnson was called to Waterloo last Wednesday by the death of his brother, Elmer E. Johnson, who was smothered to death in a coal chute.

Mr. Johnson, who had been employed by the Young Coal Co. at Waterloo for the past twenty years, and who was yard foreman, was looking after work at a loading chute, taking the place of one of the men who was off duty because of illness. In some manner Mr. Johnson fell into a chute that was being loaded with stoker coal and smothered to death before he was found two hours later.

Military funeral services were held Saturday afternoon by the Waterloo Legion for Mr. Johnson, who was 51 and a war veteran. Burial was made at the Waterloo cemetery.

Besides his wife, Mr. Johnson leaves two sons; two brothers, P. W. Johnson of Klemme and Clarence of Paxtan Ill.; and five sisters, Ruth Kelley of Buckley, Ill., Lillian Lau of Albert Lea, Minn., Olga Corbett, Paxton, Ill., Clara Ryberg and Alma Ryberg, both of Dayton, Ohio.

BRITT MAN APPOINTED WEED COMMISSIONER FOR HANCOCK COUNTY

GARNER—Ray Hunsley of Britt was appointed Hancock county weed commissioner for 1939 at a meeting of the county board of supervisors held at the courthouse here.

Mr. Hunsley succeeds Emil Damm of Crystal Lake, who served as commissioner in 1938 but who did not seek the office again because he is going to farm this year.

Wages for the commissioner were set at 40 cents an hour with an allowance of five cents a mile for traveling expenses.

CLOSE DECKER BUYING PLANT AND YARDS AT GARNER PERMANENTLY

GARNER—The Decker buying plant and yards here were closed last week and are not expected to be reopened. Kenneth Haynes, who has been in charge of the local office, has been named buyer at the Mason City branch, and he and Mrs. Haynes plan to move to Mason City at once.

Not As Many Families Moving On March First As In Former Years

SEVERAL FAMILIES IN THIS COMMUNITY MOVING MAR. 1

CORPORATE HOLDINGS OF IOWA FARMS INCREASING

Now Amounts To About 12 Per Cent As Compared With 11.2 Per Cent In 1937

An increase of nearly 1 per cent in the number of Iowa farms passing into the hands of corporations during the last 2 years boosts total corporate land ownings in 1939 to the highest figure in the history of this state.

This is revealed by William G Murray, agricultural economist at Iowa State ollege, who recently completed a sample of one-half of the counties in the state to determine the shifts of corporate land holdings.

Equal To 1800 Farms

The cause of his increase is undoubtedly due to the drouth conditions which have seriously affected western and southern Iowa, Murray asserts.

Corporations now own an area approximately equal to 12 of the 99 counties in Iowa.

"In 1937 corporations owned 11 2 per cent of the state's farming area. Now they own an estimated 12 per cent, an increase of 1,800 average size farms in 2 years," he says.

Increase In West, South

Greatest increases in corporate ownership occurred in the 14 counties along the western border of the state and in the 10 counties in the southern part of Iowa.

In eight counties in northern Iowa a decrease in corporate holding was registered, while in 10 counties in the central area of the state, corporations sold as much land as they bought.

Insurance companies are by far the most extensive corporate land owners in the state, owning an aggregate acreage equal to six Iowa counties. Muray finds.

Weekly News Analysis

White House-Congress Hostility May Mean 3rd Party for 1940

By Joseph W. La Bine

EDITOR'S NOTE—When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of the news analyst, and not necessarily of the newspaper.

Congress

". . . Few have been able to get along with it. None have been able to get along without it. Those executives who know how to work with it most advantageously will find it the greatest support for the accomplishment of executive processes . . . Presidents will continue to be made and unmade in the actions of the senate."

The speaker was Utah's dignified Sen. Elbert D. Thomas, foe of proposed Wagner act amendments, supporter of Sen. Robert M. LaFollette's civil liberties probe. When such a consistent New Dealer makes remarks like that on the senate floor, colleagues know White House and congress are no longer on speaking terms. Senator Thomas' speech (written at 3 a. m. on a sleepless night) culminated a series of executive-legislative rifts that is frankly alarming proponents of Democratic peace:

Appointments. Last summer President Roosevelt named Floyd Roberts of Virginia as federal district judge. This was "personally offensive and obnoxious" to Virginia's Sen. Carter Glass and his colleague, Harry F. Byrd, because it constituted an effort to remove patronage from the hands of congress. Though the senate supported the Byrd-Glass contention 72 to 9, it appeared President Roosevelt was only beginning an effort to discredit his congressional foes by over-riding their nominations for choice political jobs.

As the rebels prepared to throw out Wisconsin's allegedly red-tinted Thomas R. Amlie, White House interstate commerce commission nominee, several other startling appointments were announced. A slap at Ohio's Sen Vic Donahey was the naming of Herschel W. Arant, Ohio State's law school dean, to the circuit court of appeals. Next came Philadelphia's Francis Biddle, also named an appellate judge over objections of Pennsylvania's devout New Dealer, Sen. Joseph F. Guffey. This was also a blow at John Lewis' C. I. O., because the Guffey nominee (Judge Michael A. Musmanno of Pittsburgh) is an ardent pro-Lewis man. In New York the President appointed a Republican federal judge, and in Philadelphia he gave another judgeship to Harry E. Kaldoner, whose legal experience was limited before he joined the cabinet of ex-Gov. George H. Earle in 1934. These were but a few sample Presidential appointments that ruffled congressional nerves.

Legislation. Though Democratic house majority leaders have accepted a modified form of government reorganization (defeated last year), and though the President's $552,000,000 extra defense appropriation will probably pass, White House-congress friendship ends there. Already eliminated is a $100,000,000 appropriation for TVA at Gilbertsville, Ky. The President's request for a new start on Florida's ship canal and the Passamaquoddy tidal project is doomed. While a rebellious senate foreign affairs committee threatens to publicize all its future hearings (as a brake on secret administration plans) the Export-Import bank has been restrained from making large credit loans to foreign nations. This will forestall embarrassment over "unofficial alliances."

While social security's reserve fund is under fire (because the U. S. borrows all reserve funds), the New Deal's vast relief program is endangered by a growing congressional economy bloc. The President's demand for restoration of $150,000,000 lopped off his deficiency relief appropriation is now sidetracked in favor of a long range welfare study. Virginia's Rep. Clifton A. Woodrum has asked a cut in next year's relief budget to $1,120,000,000 (half the President's request) and assignment of relief control to congressional hands. But relief will probably be settled by adoption of the bill designed by South Carolina's Sen. James F. Byrnes, following last year's senate inquiry.

Miscellaneous. Anti-White House sentiment took voice in continuation of the house committee to investigate un-Americanism, under which Texas' Martin Dies received $100,000 and a carte blanche to explode all the bombshells he wished. Pending are impeachment proceedings against Madame Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins, charged with harboring Alien Harry Bridges, allegedly communistic west coast C. I. O. leader.

Significance. Since the President and congress seem to be heading down opposite paths, the best guess holds that Mr. Roosevelt is deliberately inviting a split in Democratic ranks leading to formation of a third party for 1940. But Labor's Nonpartisan league (C. I. O) must be a bulwark of that party, and the anti-C. I. O. slur contained in Judge Musmanno's rejection fails to jibe with these plans. Moreover most debated presidential appointments have been judicial, practically valueless from a political viewpoint. But party-smashing need follow no definite course; damaged feelings could easily be patched up in time for a third party campaign in 1940 —or 1944.

Pan America

Protesting Mexican expropriation of American-owned oil lands, Secretary of State Cordell Hull has demanded compensation. Meanwhile a false belief has arisen in Mexico City that President Roosevelt sympathizes with the revolutionary regime of President Lazaro Cardenas. Far from sympathetic, Mr. Roosevelt recently called Mexican ambassador Dr. Don Francisco Castillo Najera to the White House for a seminar on international good taste. The lesson: That sovereign Mexico can expropriate but must also make compensation. As Senor Najera carried this protest home, U. S. oilmen were heartened into offering President Cardenas a settlement proposal: Oil lands would be returned, title and profits then divided on a 50-50 basis between government and oil companies.

But news from Mexico City made it clear this offer would be rejected. In addition to a $17,000,000 agreement signed last December to barter oil for German machinery, President Cardenas has just announced two new barter contracts involving approximately $4,000,000,000 in Mexican oil and Nazi manufactured protects.

That Senor Cardenas is smugly satisfied with his progress was evidenced by the remark of his chief political aid, Luis Rodriguez, made to visiting Col. Fulgencio Batista, Cuban strong man: "When the President found the foreign companies refusing to obey the government's orders in court, he gave the stern order to expropriate the oil companies. We show it to you as an authentic victory of the revolution, as an example to you."

Whether Strong Man Batista would accept the example remains to be seen, but Mexico already has one Latin-American ally in this pleasant game. Traveling through Bolivia, Correspondent John T. Whitaker of the Chicago Daily News found that nation's oil dealings make Mexico's expropriations look like child's play. Specific example was Bolivian seizure of $17,000,000 in Standard Oil properties early in 1937 on a trumped-up fraud charge.

Judiciary

A rare privilege is that of the U. S. President who can appoint four Supreme court judges. Already Franklin Roosevelt has named Hugo Black, Stanley Reed and Felix Frankfurter, liberals like himself. Next will come appointment of a new liberal to succeed liberal Justice Louis J. Brandeis, retired at full pay to help his fellow Jews and enjoy old age. Expected is an appointment from the middle west, now represented only by Minnesota's Pierce Butler. Since many plainsmen felt short-changed last December when Mr. Roosevelt appointed Justice Frankfurter, an easterner, a middle west appointment is considered incumbent.

Miscellany

Announced, by Secretary of the Treasury Henry Morgenthau, a $12,000,000 profit since January 30, 1934, for the highly secret $2,000,000,000 stabilization fund.

Asia

Three hundred miles southwest of Hong Kong and directly in Britain's communication path lies tiny but important Hainan island, generally considered within France's sphere of influence. What both France and Britain have long feared is Japanese seizure of Hainan, despite a 1937 agreement that Tokyo would stay out so long as France blocked munition traffic to China via French Indo-China. But Japan has now violated that agreement, occupying Hainan on a "temporary" basis so long as military necessity demands.

Most observers fear that "military necessity" will demand permanent occupation.

Significant is the fact that France has just rejected Japan's ambassador to Paris. Still more significant is the one-two-three sequence in which Hainan's occupation followed Barcelona's fall, just as Canton's occupation last September followed the Munich settlement. Each time democracies capitulate in the west, Tokyo capitalizes on Hitler-Mussolini triumphs to nip at the Franco-British far eastern position.

In typical Japanese fashion, Hainan's occupation is a poker-faced, self-righteous trick that dares Britain, France and the U. S. to retaliate. By Chinese, who see their nation falling apart bit by bit, the move is greeted with mixed emotion. The hoped-for consequence is a lifting of France's ban on arms shipments through Indo-China.

But from his headquarters in far western Chungching, Chinese Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek mourned Hainan's fall as the "beginning of Japanese domination in the Pacific." Predicting heavy consequences for the U. S., France and Britain, General Chiang not only saw broken communication lines between Hong Kong, Singapore and Australia, but also a threat to U. S. and British naval bases at Hawaii and Singapore.

Religion

Last August President Roosevelt proposed the intergovernmental refugee committee which subsequently elected American George Rublee its chairman. After almost six months of disheartening effort, Mr. Rublee handed the committee his resignation and the net result of an almost single-handed battle. The result: A temporary plan for taking care of Germany's unwanted Jews, wheedled from Reichsfuehrer Hitler. Points: (1) German Jews could return to their jobs until the committee solves its problem; (2) Young German Jews can emigrate provided they arrange to finance later emigration of kinsmen; (3) older Jews would be protected until emigration is completed; (4) emigrating Jews could borrow from a trust fund.

People

Arrested, Dr. Logan Clendening, nationally known physician, for wielding an ax on a WPA air compressor in St. Louis because it interfered with his efforts to work.

International

Intentionally or otherwise, U. S. Secretary of State Cordell Hull stepped to a microphone the night before congress went to work on President Roosevelt's enlarged defense program. By the time he left, the world had learned how America's No. 1 diplomat and tradesman feels about war: He sympathizes with the White House

After offering the standard defense argument that it is a nation's "sacred duty" to arm when the specter of a major war "haunts the world," Mr. Hull staged two surprises. The first, unusual for a diplomat, was a rejection of proposals that the U. S. call a disarmament conference. Next surprise was a common sensical explanation that arms conferences mean nothing when the basic causes underlying war are economic. These, he said, must be wiped out as a prerequisite

Father of the government's current reciprocal trade program and an outspoken opponent of the German barter trade plan (See PAN AMERICA), Cordell Hull may have been hinting for a U. S. lead in plans to settle the world's ills via the economic conference route Since this could only mean "appeasement" as practiced by British Prime Minister Neville Chamberlain, most observers thought Mr Hull was not advocating an economic conference, but was instead advertising the merits of reciprocal trade treaties as a cure.

Historic Footrace

WHEN Capt. John Whistler arrived on the shores of Lake Michigan in 1803 to build a military post—Fort Dearborn of tragic memory—one of the subalterns in his command was his son, Lieut. William Whistler. Young Whistler was more than six feet tall and famous for his strength and endurance.

A frequent visitor at Fort Dearborn was a young Pottawatomie chief, the champion runner of the tribe. Believing that Lieutenant Whistler was just the man to spoil the Indian's record, the officers at the fort proposed a five-mile footrace between the two men to which they readily agreed.

The race was a thriller. At the start the Pottawatomie sprang into the lead and held it for almost the entire distance. But near the end young Whistler managed to close the gap between them and by a final burst of speed plunged across the finish line several yards ahead of his rival.

The race had an exciting sequel. During the War of 1812 the same Pottawatomie chief, who was now an ally of the British, sent a challenge for a hand-to-hand combat with Whistler or any other officer or soldier in the American army. Whistler promptly accepted. It was agreed that no firearms were to be used.

The fight began. Whistler dodged the tomahawk that was hurled at him and closed in on his opponent. The Indian stabbed at him with his long hunting knife but missed. Then the lieutenant's sword finished the duel.

An American Mandarin

IN 1859 Taiping rebels had almost overthrown the Manchu dynasty in China. Fifteen of the eighteen provinces had been captured when Frederick T. Ward, a 28-year-old sailor from Salem, Mass., quit his ship and offered to put down the revolution—if they would pay him $75,000 for each city recaptured.

The rebels were knocking at the gates of Shanghai when the Manchu leaders agreed to young Ward's price and allowed him to train his own army. He recruited his men from among the human derelicts around the wharves, but he instilled in them the discipline he had learned as a soldier in the French army during the Crimean war.

Then, at the head of 500 men, and with a pistol in each hand, he ordered an attack on Sungkiang, held by 5,000 rebels. His men fought hand to hand on the top of the city wall and held it by tossing over the bodies of Taiping soldiers. In 24 hours Manchu re-enforcements arrived. When the battle was over, Ward had only 128 men left and 100 of them were wounded. But he had earned his first $75,000 and a wide reputation as a military leader.

He continued to fight, successfully taking the city of Singpo by outmaneuvering 20,000 Taiping rebels. When they again threatened Shanghai, he drove 10,000 of them back 10 miles with a force of only 2,500. Then he took the city of Quanfuling.

Ward was made a mandarin and his fame spread throughout the empire. Soon he was able to increase his well-trained army to 6,000 men, besides piling up a huge fortune.

He had been wounded five times, but in September, 1862, in a battle at Tseki, he was hit for the sixth time and killed. The Chinese mourned him as a national hero and buried him in the Temple of Confucius at Sungkiang.

Eskimo Heroine

IN 1921, science attempted to find out whether man could live on the otherwise uninhabited islands of the Arctic. The experiment proved more. It revealed to the world the calm heroism of Ada Blackjack, who will be remembered as the most courageous woman of the Eskimo race.

Four men were landed with a year's supplies on Wrangel island, 110 miles north of Siberia in the Arctic. Ada Blackjack went along as seamstress, cook and servant. One year later a relief ship was to pick them up.

The year passed but ice floes blocked the relief ship. Lorne Knight, one of the four men, became ill with scurvy. The other three left on a trek across the ice to Siberia to send a rescue party. No one ever heard of them again.

Left alone with Knight, Ada Blackjack went through eight months more of mental torture. For two months she nursed him. Then he died.

The relief ship finally came. They found her still keeping the diary that Knight had turned over to her when he could no longer hold a pencil.

One entry in the diary read: "God is the only one who will brought me home again." God did not fail the faith and persistent courage that enabled Ada Blackjack to face a seemingly hopeless situation without breaking.

TIPS to Gardeners

Making the Garden Pay

VEGETABLE gardens are grown to provide fresher, more nourishing food for the family, and to conserve on food bills. Therefore, crops must be wisely chosen and systematically planted.

According to Walter H. Nixon, vegetable expert, the most important vegetables considered both for food value and garden space required are: Beans, cabbage, carrots, beets, squash, tomatoes, onions, peas and spinach.

To get the most from garden space, plant two crops of spinach, one in spring, the other in late summer. Plant Chinese cabbage and parsnips about midsummer in space occupied earlier by beans, radishes and peas. Make successive plantings of carrots and beets for a steady supply of small tender roots.

Plant bush beans and beets on both sides of tomato rows. When tomatoes need the space, those earlier crops will have been pulled and used.

Corn can be worked into the garden plan even though there is not such space. Plant spinach or beets or green onions between rows of slower-growing corn. Then grow pole beans (cornfield beans) to climb on the corn stalks.

AROUND THE HOUSE

When Making Mustard.—Add a drop of salad oil. This improves the flavor and appearance.

Preserving Rubber Bands.—Keep rubber bands in a tightly closed box They keep very much longer than if exposed to the air.

Table Knives.—If handles are stained, a good rubbing with a soft cloth sprinkled with peroxide of hydrogen will restore them to their original color.

When Washing a Sweater.—Before washing a woolen sweater which has buttons and buttonholes, sew up the buttonholes to prevent their stretching.

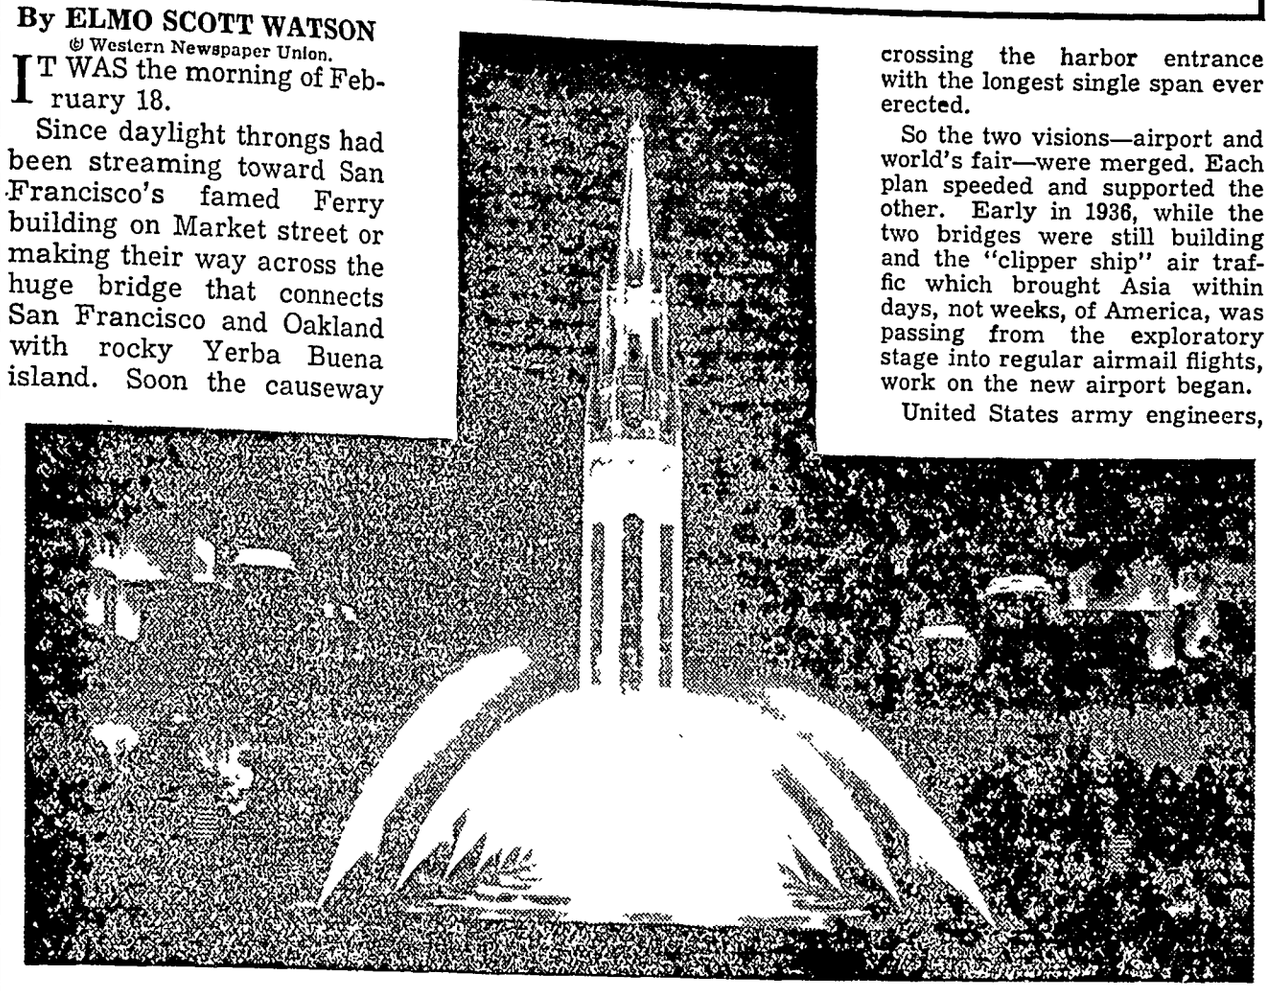
Thousands of World's Fair Visitors Swarm to Magic Island That Has Been Built in San Francisco Bay

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

© Western Newspaper Union.

IT WAS the morning of February 18.

Since daylight throngs had been streaming toward San Francisco's famed Ferry building on Market street or making their way across the huge bridge that connects San Francisco and Oakland with rocky Yerba Buena island. Soon the causeway over which they were hurrying from Yerba Buena toward their objective, a little island 300 yards away, was packed with people.



NIGHT SCENE ON TREASURE ISLAND—Shown here under illumination are the arched waters of the Fountain of the Evening Star in the Court of the Moon on Treasure Island. In the background is the Tower of the Sun, bathed in white and amber lights.

Eight o'clock!

The "Portals of the Pacific," the gates between the huge pyramidal towers, swung open and the crowd surged forward for their first views of the wonders that lay beyond those portals. Within four hours more than 200,000 people were swarming over the island—Treasure Island, it's called.

Twelve o'clock!

High up in the Tower of the Sun a 44-bell carillon poured out a flood of melody. Then while a mixed chorus of 500 voices sang a hymn of joy, muted trumpets sounded an invocation of thanksgiving and prayer. A few moments later, over the radio loudspeakers came the voices of California notables—Gov. Culbert L. Olson, Mayor Angelo Rossi of San Francisco and Leland W. Cutler, president of the exposition—with brief messages of welcome.

Twelve-thirty.

For a moment the loudspeakers were silent. Then . . .

"The President of the United States!"

From the other side of the continent came the voice of Franklin D. Roosevelt.

When his message was concluded, two world-famous soloists led the chorus in a moving anthem of prayer and thanksgiving, accompanied by a 100-piece band and the carillon. Then as the last notes of the anthem faded away, cannon roared out a 21-gun salute to the Chief Executive of the nation and from all over the island brilliant daylight fireworks exploded in the sky.

And thus was the 1939 Golden Gate International exposition opened to the world!

Like every other world's fair ever held, the one at San Francisco has innovations m architecture, illumination, exhibits and special events which make previous expositions seem quaintly archaic. But in one respect, it is absolutely unique. That is its site—a man-made island set down in the middle of one of the great harbors of the world and flanked by the two greatest bridges in the world.

The story of this truly magic island, which now stands where but three years ago boats plied the blue waters of San Francisco bay, sea fowl swam and fishermen cast their lines, is one of the real romances of American initiative, ingenuity and engineering achievement. That story began less than 10 years ago when progress in aviation indicated that San Francisco was destined to become the "air crossroads of the Pacific." To achieve that destiny she must have a suitable airport.

In 1931 the San Francisco junior chamber of commerce surveyed 14 possible airport sites and the final choice of the experts was the Yerba Buena Shoals. They lay just north of Yerba Buena island, mid-point of the $80,000,000 Bay bridge which was then being planned, so that no more centrally located site, from the standpoint of the entire Bay area, could be imagined.

An airport there would be only 4.7 miles from San Francisco's downtown district and 7.3 miles, via an arterial boulevard, from Oakland's center of population. Records showed only 142 hours of fog annually for the past 45 years and the steady prevailing winds were gentle—both essential elements for an airport.

Meanwhile San Francisco was planning a world's fair in celebration of the future completion of the two greatest bridges in the world. She was building the $80,000,000 San Francisco-Oakland Bay bridge, longest and most costly anywhere, and the $33,000,000 Golden Gate bridge, crossing the harbor entrance with the longest single span ever erected.

So the two visions—airport and world's fair—were merged. Each plan speeded and supported the other. Early in 1936, while the two bridges were still building and the "clipper ship" air traffic which brought Asia within days, not weeks, of America, was passing from the exploratory stage into regular airmail flights, work on the new airport began.

United States army engineers, financed with $3,803,800 in WPA funds, sponsored by the exposition company, began assembling their dredges. Eleven of these huge machines—a fleet of nine at one time—began pumping black sand from the floor of the bay and sluicing it through pipelines over Yerba Buena shoal. Around the shoal had been built a sea wall nearly three and a quarter miles long and containing 287,000 tons of quarried rock.

Largest Man-Made Island.

By the time the work had been completed 20,000,000 cubic yards of sand had been compacted within the seawall. From a natural depth of 2 to 26 feet below water, the shoals had risen to a height of 13 feet above the tides making a 300-acre rectangle of land—the largest island ever built by man! It is a little more than a mile long, nearly two-thirds of a mile wide and is connected to the shore of Yerba Buena island by a causeway 300 yards long and 37 yards wide.

This causeway is the key to the island's remarkable accessibility, for across it are six lanes of highway to link the island into the traffic streams of the Bay bridge. Four ferry ships supplement these highways in transporting, at the peak rate of 53,000 hourly, the millions who will visit the exposition this year. Three of these ferry slips, on the San Francisco side, will land the crowds from San Francisco's Ferry building on Market street, discharge them into a ferry terminal building which, with the slips themselves, cost more than three quarters of a million dollars. The fourth ferry slip is on the Oakland shore of the island.

Highways that have been constructed as a part of the general transportation plan take into account the dual function of Treasure Island as an exposition site and a future airport. The army engineers who built the system across Yerba Buena island did it along novel lines. Three traffic lanes are of permanent construction for airport utility.

Gigantic Hangars.

Hardly had the water drained from the island's advancing sand fill, when construction began on three buildings that will survive the glitter of the fair to endure as airport facilities. One is the $900,000 reinforced concrete air terminal building to serve the fair as administrative headquarters; its permanent use will find it equipped with complete facilities including passenger, mail and express terminals, restaurants, offices, public observation galleries and meteorological towers.

The others are two gigantic hangar buildings, each 287 by 335 feet on the ground and 78 feet high, built of steel and concrete, costing $450,000 each. For these buildings exposition engineers applied a new design to hangar construction — "cantilevered walls" which actually aid, by their weight, in supporting the roof load.

During the fair these structures will serve as the Palace of Fine and Liberal Arts, and the Hall of Air Transportation. Later, as airport facilities, their huge 200 by 40 foot doors may be heightened at centers to 65 feet to accommodate the rudders of airplanes greater than any now known. All other buildings on Treasure Island are of temporary construction, for removal after the exposition to provide clear airport runways.

An ancient walled city is the basis of the exposition's structural scheme. In the spacious central Court of Honor stands the 400-foot Tower of the Sun, which is only 57 feet in diameter at its base but which competes in height with the lofty towers of the Bay bridge nearby. From it radiates phalanxes of exhibit palaces, each from 400 to 900 feet long and about 200 feet wide. They are spaced by broad concourses—Court of the Seven Seas, Court of Flowers, Court of Reflections, Court of the Moon, Court of Pacifica, Treasure Gardens—names which characterize their symbolism.

All of them are windowless for display uniformity under constant illumination and have been built according to a so-called "Pacific" style of architecture which combines the new and the old. Ancient mystical Oriental forms have been blended into long horizontal lines, setback pyramids and masses characteristic of Malayan, Incan and Cambodian treatments. The elephant, mammoth beast of Far East pageantry, is a predominating decorative note, crowning as it does the pyramidal entrances that flank the "Portals of the Pacific."

The color scheme of the exposition buildings includes 19 different shades characteristic of both the rare shades of California wildflowers and the variegated hues of the Orient. The basic plaster body color is a yellow ivory which has been designated "Exposition ivory." Along with it will be seen these: Old Mission fawn, Pagoda yellow, Pebble Beach coral, Santa Barbara taupe, California ecru, Evening Star blue, Polynesian brown, Sun of Dawn yellow, Hawaiian emerald green, Santa Clara apricot, Imperial Dragon red, Death Valley mauve, Pacific blue, Ming Jade green (light), Ming Jade green (dark), Southern Cross blue, Del Monte blue, China Clipper blue and Treasure Island gold. These colors are reduced to half-tones or less on exteriors, to avoid the garish under night illumination which increases the intensity of the basic color.

By turning their huge buildings "inside out," almost literally, stylists have achieved a cement stucco that bathes the buildings and tall walls in a radiant golden glow, sparkling with prismatic colors, day or night. It's done with vermiculite—a mica-like substance. Exposition stylists found that this material, applied to wet stucco, reflects light in a million scintillating gems and makes the walls glow and glitter with live fire.

Statues, panels in relief, great murals and paintings are used to glorify the courts and basic buildings. Nearly all the outstanding western artists and sculptors are represented there.

Ink Spots And Spatters

By Jergie

Spring may be "just around the corner" but the blizzard Tuesday made it look like mid-winter to most people. Remember three years ago what a "spell" of weather we had in February Anything can happen in North Iowa. . . lots of time before the grass starts growing.

I-S-A-S

And speaking of winter. . . we wonder how many people got an extra piece of enjoyment out of feeding the birds during the winter months? It really is surprising how many birds will be attracted to your yard if you have out a little box in which to place bread crusts and bits of fat and tallow. From our window we have seen Downy Woodpeckers, Cardinals, Nuthatches, Blue Jays, Chickadees and others. It's not too late to feed the birds. Try it.

I-S-A-S

The Seven Eagles Conference Cup, as far as the Shamrocks are concerned, hinges on an "if." If they can beat Hayfield, the team which surprised Woden, then the Shamrocks will be tied with Woden for first place honors. Then the problem will be whether to play off the tie, or give both teams a cup. It's up to the school men of the conference to make that decision.

I-S-A-S

Now for the story of the week: A minister in a nearby town was giving a temperance sermon recently and stated emphatically that if he had all the wine in the world that he would dump it in the river. And that if he had all the whiskey, gin, beer and all other intoxicating drinks that he would dump them all in the river! At the close of the sermon he called upon the congregation for someone to volunteer a song to sing. A man in the back row piped up with "Shall We Gather At The River."

I-S-A-S

ARE YOU DISCOURAGED?

If you ever feel that you are licked and can't go on, remember the "success" story of Lincoln:

"IF"

Have you ever stopped to think how big the word "IF" really is? Looking in the dictionary, we find some of the different meanings are: in case that, whether, a noun meaning doubt, on condition that, granting, allowing, supposing that, and many others meaning practically the same thing. It takes up a wide space in our thoughts and we often use it not realizing how important it really is. Rudyard Kipling wrote a four stanza poem entitled "IF."

If you feel discouraged don't give up. Others have felt the same way and lived thruogh the day. Many of them have had courage enough to go on and finally, after hard struggles, came out on top.

After writing this, we find another interpretation of the word. Mr. Galbreth used it saying, "If we beat Hayfield, and Crystal Lake beats Woden, we will win the Seven Eagles Conference." It's something to look forward to.

—Doris.

AROUND K. H. S. ASSEMBLY

The freshmen have been studying continuously the past week because of six weeks tests. We hope we all have passed.

The general science class has started a new topic entitled, "How the Earth was Prepared for Life Upon It."

The Home Ec I class began sewing and learning the different kinds of hems and seams. We are going to start making pajamas the last part of the week.

The band members enjoyed their trip to Kanawha, Thursday evening. Besides the band, two girls from here played solos. Elsie Ward played a trombone solo, and Jacqueline Kudje played a violin solo.

There were several vocal numbers on the program, which the Kanawha school presented. The band from Klemme closed the program for the evening.

The Senior girls are planning to finish their first dress by the end of the week. Some people still don't seem to be able to hang on to their thimbles. The other day Doris dropped hers down between the tables and couldn't get it out. I wonder! Is that an accident or doesn't she like to use a thimble? You should have seen the weapon she used in securing it—a baseball bat.

Miss Greiner has been initiating her camera, lately. Wednesday everyone was busy sewing in the Home Ec II class, when Evelyn glanced up and saw the camera pointed at her. Of course she opened her mouth and Miss Greiner told her, "Sh." She started to giggle. The rest couldn't figure out what was so funny. Miss Greiner told us she had taken our pictures. Maybe it's a good thing we weren't looking because just loko who was sitting close to her—Doris and Mildred.

Mr. Galbreth says the Seniors agreed very well on their class motto—"Before us lies a timber, let us build." It seems they had a hard time to pick their colors, but they finally decided on crimson and silver. Their flower is going to be the crimson rose.

Elsie Ward is the first one to make a perfect copy in a fifteen minute speed test.

—K H S—

MORE FUN!

At last the Seniors with the exception of Irene Suckow and Stella Barz journeyed to Mason City for a full day of enjoyment. (You boys don't know what you missed by going before). To start the day off we went to Russell's and tried to smile our best. Most of us did very well, we see by our proofs.

Russells had arranged a tour which started at Hamilton's Business college. Bob Hamilton explained to us all the different rooms and machines, which was very interesting. Hamilton's also gave each of us a ticket to the Cecil Theater. Yes, the movie was "Idiot's Delight" and we all liked it.

Another interesting place was Marshall & Swift, Cleaners. Mr Swift explained all the machines and gave us a display of his furs which was especially interesting to the boys.

After dinner we were going to give our school yell over KGLO, but I guess the boys found more food than they could consume in that length of time. We girls made it. Ruth and I said "hello" to all our friends.

If you are looking for a place of complication, go directly to the Telephone Co. at Mason City. It was interesting but even we Seniors found it too complicated for us.

By the time we had done all this our proofs were ready. Everyone compared photos and to complete the day, we went to the show.

—Mildred.

By H. A. Grantham

Opinions expressed herein are those of the writer and should not be construed as reflecting the policy of the Republican State Central Committee, any individual or group, or the newspaper in which this column appears.

In the creation of the office of state car dispatcher to handle the fleet of state owned cars, is revealed the true picture of the thousands of unnecessary dollars tied up in automobiles and spent each year in mileage and upkeep. A recent newspaper dispatch listed a total of 348 passenger cars and 179 trucks operated as of January 2 "exclusive of certain departments. It is this "exclusive of certain departments" that hides the real story One of the many state officials interested with Governor Wilson in eliminating as many of these cars as possible, informs this column that the state owns 1987 passenger cars and that the creation of the dispatcher and application of other economizing methods is expected to reduce this number by 300 to 400

OHIO PLAN

Senator A Claire Dewey, Washington Republican, and Senator A J Shaw, Pochahontas, also a Republican, have discovered in Ohio an idea which they believe will solve many of the vexing financial problems of the State of Iowa. The sales tax collection method now in use in the Buckeye state will, if applied to Iowa, provide the necessary funds for old age assistance, homestead exemption and leave a balance of two or three million dollars for the farm-to-market road system Such a fund is in itself remarkable enough but it becomes positively astounding when these two senators point out that it can be raised without additional cost to the taxpayer or the retail merchant

PARADOX

Many legislators have investigated the Iowa sales tax program and concluded that while from eighteen million to twenty million dollars is collected from the public each year, only twelve million or thirteen million reaches the state of Iowa. A tax of two per cent on retail sales by the purchaser is contemplated under the statute. But because collection starts on purchases of fifteen cents and is collected in even cents, sales in certain brackets increase the actual percentage to between six and seven per cent. The retailer reports and remits to the state on a basis of two per cent on gross sales and certain types of businesses are reported to make a huge profit. Paradoxically, other retail establishments lose heavily and pay the state more than is actually collected from the customer.

ELIMINATE PROFIT

The Iowa adaption of the Ohio plan would eliminate the sales tax chiseler, recover for the state all sales taxes paid by the customer, relieve the merchant of losses between collection and apparent liability as shown by his gross total, and cost the ultimate consumer no more than he is paying at present. Stripped of its details the Ohio plan makes use of revenue stamps in rolls similar to theater tickets. When a sale is made the retailer merely detaches the proper amount of stamps from the roll. He isn't required to paste the stamps on anything The stamps are automatically cancelled when detached from the roll. The customer will assume some liability in insisting that the proper amount of revenue stamps be detached and the customer will be paid for this interest in increased collections for homestead exemption. The merchant pays only such taxes as he has collected and will be paid a modest percentage of his total for the service. Since the stamps will be supplied through the county treasurer much of the collection cost is eliminated and the county will also receive a small fee for handling the stamps and funds. Senators Shaw and Dewey believe the idea will recover from $2,000,000 to $5,000,000 per year with no additional costs to anybody.

VETERANS

Two new laws of interest to war veterans have been signed by Governor Wilson. One permits veterans to deduct war service exemptions from assessed value of his property after homestead exemption has been made while another permits him to apply his service exemption to property other than his home if he wishes. Thus the veteran may apply homestead exemption to his home and the service exemption to other property.

RECESS

Time out for thinking things over and for the arrangement of some method of handling the shower of new bills has been declared by the state legislature. Both the House and Senate are in recess for a week and next Monday will atetmpt to sort the wheat from the chaff and get down to real business during the final weeks of the session. Starting next Monday fewer new bills will be heard of because new legislation from that day on will be handled through committee only. Sifting committese will probably strangle a long list of proposals of doubtful value. With decks thus cleared, both chambers will begin serious consideration of important legislative proposals and either pass or kill them. The number of bills proposed before the recess began was in excess of 1,000.

TAG ENDS

Governor Wilson's most recent photograph will be used on the cover of a national magazine—Young Republican—in March . . . because somebody forgot about it hundreds of school children of Iowa have been disappointed in their requests to the Secretary of State's office for printed copies of the Constitution of Iowa . . . . . G. G. Van Vliet, head of Dealers License Division in the Motor Vehicle Department, has lived in the Savery Hotel for sixteen years—and only changed rooms once . . . . the bulkiest bill of the present session will be the appropriations bill—the state's expense account . . . . . later bulletin; Judge Jesse Miller of Des Moines has lived in the Savery ever since it was built; some twenty years . . . . . State Treasurer Bagley has the darndest time! He worked so late the other night he got locked in the state house . . . . . Arch McFarlane of Black Hawk county is the legislature's veteran with twenty-four years of service . . . . .

INCREASE IN NATION'S LICENSED HUNTERS IN 1937

Sportsmen of the United States and Alaska paid a total of $11,348,006 for 6,860,010 hunting licenses in 1937, the latest year for which national figures are available. These figures are from the files of the United States Bureau of Biological Survey.

The Biological Survey states that license figure reports reveal that the number of hunters is increasing. License returns for the country as a whole were nearly a million over the total for the year 1936, in which year there also was an increase of nearly a million.

Federal Migratory Bird Hunting Stamps brought an additional $783,039 in 1937, bringing the total for licenses and Federal duck stamps to $12,131,045.

YEAST CULTURE FEEDS HAVE NOT PAID IN SWINE FEEDING

Yeast culture feeds are being pushed this winter as a supplement for the poor quality oats grown in Iowa last year.

Tests conducted recently by the Animal Husbandry Department at Iowa State College show that fermenting grain with a prepared yeast culture to feed growing pigs is far from a money saving practice.

The literature released by the makers of the yeast culture feeds might lead hogmen to believe that these advertised "scientific blends of digestive lulture" convert the common grains to feeds that make cheap pork.

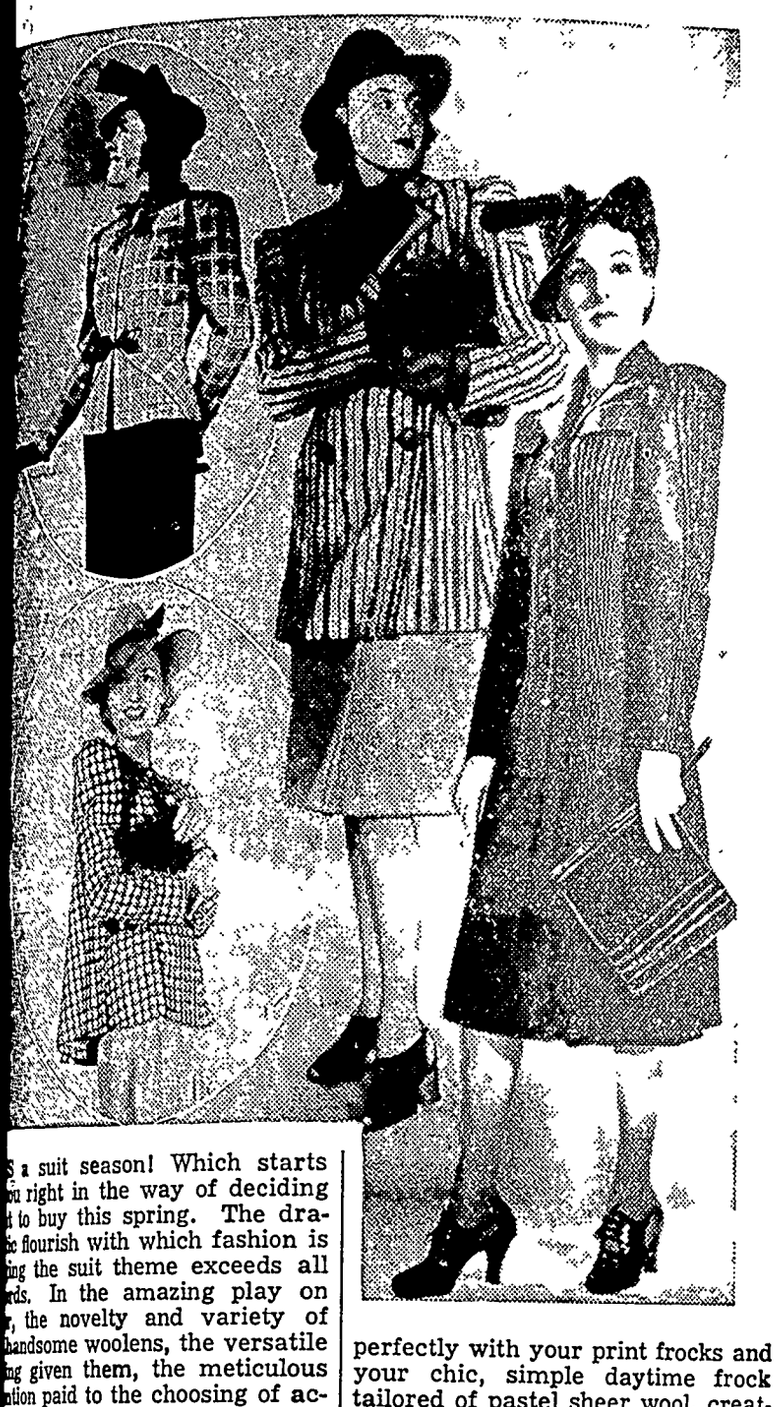
Catch Suits! It's a Grand And Glorious Suit Season

By CHERIE NICHOLAS



It's a suit season! Which starts you right in the way of deciding what to buy this spring. The dramatic flourish with which fashion is treating the suit theme exceeds all records. In the amazing play on color, the novelty and variety of fabrics, the handsome woolens, the versatile styling given them, the meticulous attention paid to the choosing of accessories, you are made to feel the importance significance of each.

During the rounds of the early, preview showings the conviction grows strong that the choosing of a suit this spring dare not be a haphazard adventure. You must set forth on your suit quest with a carefully prepared plan that totals perfection in the final analysis of color and line down to the slightest detail. Study the accompanying illustration carefully are showing several suit types which were highlighted in a preview of price-setting fashions presented by the Style Creators of Chicago to the audience of visiting merchants. Among the versatile suits here pictured you can readily see that there is a wide range of choice when it comes to selecting the type that is best to your needs.

The costume suit that is making news," tops a softly styled dress with a full length slim form-fit coat, worn in the manner of the model pictured to the right in the foreground of the group. It is one of the fitted models that registers as high style this season. Perpendicular pin tucks whose definite use of tucks is obvious (for smart styling) running down the sleeves and body of the full-length luxury woolen coat, creates a fine slenderized effect in this all-navy costume. The sheer wool frock repeats the tuckings and self-covered buttons closing. A suit of this type will prove a wise investment for the coat has the air of a thoroughbred and it will ensemble perfectly with your print frocks and your chic, simple daytime frock tailored of pastel sheer wool, creating any number of different costumes for you.

Another costume suit that is of major importance is the reefer coat type as seen centered in the group. This very attractive and youthful model combines a reefer coat done in one of the new striped wools strikingly colorful in blue, beige and japonica, with a tailored beige frock. Accents of the japonica are stressed in the large leather buttons and chiffon scarf.

Short, contrast-jacket suits are the rage. The fact that they have a "young" look counts much in their style rating, for fashions this season swing to the tempo of youth. The model at the top is among the high-fashion junior costumes. It is especially important in that it has the very new swagger swing-back. This winsome jacket of navy, rose, blue and white check is worn over a rose colored frock. The charm of multi-colored wools like this is that different colored accessories will click beautifully with them, thus affording refreshing changes that will transform the entire aspect of the costume.

The vogue for plaid jackets over monotone sheer wool frocks is expressed in the distinctive jacket costume suit in the lower oval. In bright contrast to the navy frock with novel matching kid belt is the vivid red jacket barred in gray and white, with kid closing motifs that pick up the navy color.

Travel Coat

The fashionable traveler knows how to choose a coat that gives her ease!" It is of heavy blue wool with large leather buttons. Tucks over the shoulder form the pockets. The navy stripe, check and diagonal weaves are also high in favor for spring coats. Some of the newest spring coats are made snug at the waistline developing soft fullness above and below.

Scotch Influence

Many hats reflect a bit of Scotland in their design as well as color.

Juvenile Sandals Favor Open Toes

Mother's acceptance of cutout sandals is leaving its imprint on daughter's footwear fashions. Outstanding among the juvenile shoes for the coming spring are numerous versions of the toeless style. Open sides and slashed heels go along with the open toes just as they do in adult feminine styles. Patent leather is being stressed in line with mother's preference and there is much interest in colored soles and heels, the width of the soles suggesting the platform theme.

When it comes to hosiery fads, mother will have to do more than accept ombre shadings or embroidered heels to keep up with her daughter. The latest fad to appear in children's anklets is the "Stop and Go" idea. One of the socks has the word "stop" embroidered in red on the elastic cuff while the mate displays "go" in green letters.

Golden Chains as Straps for Gown

Lelong's heavy silk crepe evening gown, entirely plaited, with bodice upheld with slender golden chains which continue around the waist has been selected by several smart women, including Madame Champin, who has it in bright pink, like the model, Madame Jacques Fabry, in bright blue and Princess de Faucigny-Lucinge in ultra-marine.

"Coquille d'Or," an attractive model in dull silk crepe for the sheath skirt and the silk lame for the halter bodice, has also found favor with private clients who have ordered it in brown and gold—the color of the model—as well as in black and gold and bordeaux and gold.

PETER PREACHES TO GENTILES

LESSON TEXT—Acts 10 30-48.
GOLDEN TEXT—Look unto me, and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth: for I am God, and there is none else.—Isaiah 45 22.

"God is no respecter of persons." Sometimes one wonders whether many of His people know about that glorious attribute of the Godhead. One thing is evident, that very few care to practice this divine principle. Just now the world seems to have gone entirely berserk in its proclamation of race superiority. Along with undue and improper recognition of wealth and position, there has always been in the hearts of men a measure of prejudice against other races. These hatreds seem now to have been fanned to a flaming intolerance of such as are not of what some regard as their own superior race. The more definite this intolerance, the more unlike God people really are. Let us weigh ourselves in the balances and see if we too are found wanting.

I. "In Every Nation" (vv. 30-35). Peter was a Jew, and God now used a vision to teach him a much-needed lesson regarding the carrying of the gospel to the Gentiles. The Jews were (and still are—let us remember it) God's chosen people. However, they were not chosen for their own comfort, convenience, or glory, but that they might be channels for the outflowing of God's blessing to all nations.

Cornelius was typical of those in every nation who are ready for the preaching of the gospel. He was a God-fearing, righteous man, but none the less in need of redemption. God brought this man who was ready to receive the message together with the man Peter who was prepared to preach it, and the result was salvation.

Whatever it may be that keeps us from carrying the gospel to all nations, we ought to recognize as unchristian, and put it aside. It may be race-prejudice, for it still persists; but it may be an equally deadly indifference to the needs of others. Let us, like Peter, go to them and open our mouths (v. 34) to proclaim Christ.

II. "Good Tidings of Peace" (vv. 36-43).

The death of Christ for their sins (v. 39), His resurrection from the dead for their justification (v. 40), the coming judgment for sin (v. 42), and remission of sins in His name—these are the essentials of Peter's message. Note how plain is the truth. Jesus has come and has wrought redemption for all who will believe. Now we must choose whether we want Him to be our Judge or our Redeemer. It is a case of "either—or." Either He is your Saviour, or He will be your Judge.

"God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world; but that the world through him might be saved. He that believeth on him is not condemned: but he that believeth not is condemned already, because he hath not believed in the name of the only begotten Son of God" (John 3:17, 18).

The proclamation of this message of redemption was never completed, even "while Peter yet spake these words, the Holy Spirit fell upon them all" (v. 44). Blessed interruption! Would that we might have more like it in our churches and Bible schools.

III. "The Holy Spirit Fell" (vv. 44-48).

Notice that He came upon "them which heard the word" (v. 44). Book reviews, political addresses, discussion of civic or social problems will not bring the result. Forums, clubs, discussion groups, unless they have for their subject the Word of God, need not expect anything like this to happen. But preaching of the Word of God concerning the person and work of Christ, whether it be in a home (like that of Cornelius) or in the great cathedral (and thank God some of them do have such preaching), will result in some soul finding Christ, and receiving the Holy Spirit.

It is worthy of note that these believers gave evidence of their new-found spiritual life by magnifying God, obeying His word, and testifying to others. It is to the credit of Peter and his companions that they recognized the workings of God's grace in the lives of these Gentiles. May we also be quick to see, appreciate, and encourage every true gospel work, whether it be among our own people or with some other race, whether in our church or in some humble cottage. "God is no respecter of persons."

Revelation Must Speak

Let Reason count the stars, weigh the mountains, fathom the depths—the employment becomes her, and the success is glorious. But when the question is: "How shall man be just with God?" reason must be silent, revelation must speak; and he who will not hear it assimilates himself to the first deist, Cain; he may not kill a brother, he certainly destroys himself.—Henry Melvill.

WHAT to EAT and WHY

C. Houston Goudiss Helps to Answer the Question: What to Eat During Lent?

By C. HOUSTON GOUDISS

A CLERGYMAN friend of mine once remarked that in his opinion, Lent lasts far too long. He had reference, I believe, to the fact that in a swift-moving age, people might be more apt to keep Lent faithfully, if it terminated in a shorter period than 40 days.

Many homemakers, I feel sure, would echo his sentiments, but for a rather different reason! Numbers of them, I know, find the six weeks of Lent the most troublesome of the entire year. Their difficulty lies in planning meatless meals that satisfy hearty appetites. And since the weather is often bitterly cold in late February and early March, families usually seem hungrier, and harder to satisfy, than at almost any other season.

A Chance for Variety

Lent does challenge the homemaker to exercise imagination and ingenuity. But it also provides a golden opportunity to get out of a menu rut, if you happen to be one of those people who follow a set formula most of the year. It may, likewise, offer a chance to make some significant savings in your food budget.

Most of us feel that meat makes the meal. And it cannot be denied that its savory extractives give it a most appetizing and intriguing flavor. But there are a number of other foods which contain proteins of equal biological value. Furthermore, nutritionists hold that it is desirable to obtain protein from a number of different sources. That is because different protein foods contain varying amounts of different amino acids; and by eating a variety of protein foods, we can best obtain a wide assortment of these "building stones" of the body.

For Meatless Meals

Fish comes to mind, first of all, as a main dish for the meal that does not include meat. For those who are far from the source of supply of fresh-caught fish, there are the quick-frozen varieties, the dried and salted fish, such as finnan haddie, shredded codfish and block cod, and 27 types of canned fish and shell fish.

Canned salmon is one of the least expensive of all protein foods. And so many things can be said in its favor that one nationally known food authority referred to it as the most nutritious animal food that could be had for children over six. It is a notable source of minerals, especially calcium, phosphorus and iodine, and contains vitamins A, D, and G.

Cheese in Many Forms

Cheese is another splendid source of protein that should be used more freely, not only during Lent but throughout the entire year. It is high in energy values. And in addition, it contains the milk minerals, calcium and phosphorus, and is a good source of vitamin A. Cheese is so flavorsome that it adds zest to any meal at which it is served. And it certainly should interest the homemaker with an eye to thrift. For a little goes a long way. It is, therefore, an ideal food around which to build nourishing, appetizing and economical meals.

Macaroni, Spaghetti and Noodles

Cheese is especially good when combined with such foods as macaroni, spaghetti or egg noodles. It affords a pleasing flavor contrast. And it helps to balance the menu—in two ways. First, the proteins of cheese supplement those found in wheat from which macaroni products are made. Secondly, cheese contains a substantial amount of fat, which teams well with high carbohydrate foods, such as any of those made from the cereal grains. Cheese may also be combined with vegetables, to make another balanced food team. The cheese contributes proteins, energy values, and minerals, while the vegetables are an outstanding source of cellulose or bulk, as well as vitamins and minerals.

Don't Overlook Nuts and Legumes

Legumes are one group of vegetables which are high in energy values. They also contain protein which is suitable for repairing worn-out body tissue. Dried beans, peas and lentils may therefore be used as a main dish at Lenten meals, replacing both meat and potatoes. There are many varieties of ready-cooked beans on the market, packed in both glass and tin. And dried lima beans are particularly well-suited to being made into croquettes, patties, loaves, chowders and ragouts.

Nuts are another possibility for Lenten meals that should be considered by every homemaker. They, too, can be used for croquettes and nut loaves, as well as souffles and casserole combinations. Nuts can be combined with vegetables for a main-course dish . . . with fruit for dessert. In the form of nut butters, they make a nourishing spread for luncheon sandwiches.

Moreover, each type of nut has a distinctive taste, and walnuts, peanuts, brazil nuts and pecans, for example, each make a thoroughly delightful dish, with a flavor quite different from the others.

Most homemakers will also want to use eggs more frequently during Lent, because they are so readily available and easily prepared. This is commendable, because besides being a fine source of protein, eggs rank next to milk as a protective food.

Only a few of the many possibilities for Lent have been suggested in this brief review. But surely they give a hint of the many good and nutritious foods a homemaker can choose on those days when she plans meatless meals.

Questions Answered

Miss E. W. B.—Just to show you that foods which are seemingly dry may contain large amounts of water—bananas, about which you ask, have been found to average 74.8 per cent water, and sweet potatoes 72.6 per cent water.

GARDEN VARIETY OF SOYBEAN OFFERED FOR TRIAL IN IOWA

A "green vegetable" soybean that has a "nutty" flavor when cooked—something new to most Iowans—will be available this spring from the Iowa Agricultural Experiment Association, Ames, Joe L. Robinson, secretary, announced this week.

These beans are picked when green in the summer and cooked much the same way as lima beans or snap beans, Robinson says.

Although many diffeerent varieties of green vegetable soybeans have been tested, Kanro appears to be the best variety tested to date, Robinson finds.

These beans are nuritious, tasty and heavy yielders. Many gardeners will probably want to try them out by planting a row in their garden.

A one-fourth pound package, postpaid, costs but 20 cents, Robinson says.

planning board of the Civ- held a meeting and the s present had the com- building proposition ex- to them and the part the an Legion are taking in it. egion and Auxiliary have ny years wanted a Legion hall to hold meetings, etc. have managed until this get along without a place. winter at the Legion meet- e hut or hall proposition fi- ame to a head and a small g was decided upon but dvice and requests that it de larger and make a com- proposition out of it the g has developed into a 40 proposition with a full base- kitchen, showers, toilets, nd furnaceroom ,etc.

main floor will be 40 by 60, maple floor, high ceiling, of ventilation and well fin- n the inside. The walls will ished on the inside. The ill be finished up 5 ft. with pine. Above this will be g and the ceiling will be d insulation board. This all barked up with solid back- stand the rough usage it et. The floor will be large for basketball, skating, e foundation will be cement grade line, block above line. Floor in basement will low tile with a covering of Partitions in basement block.

the above information was to the planning board they the proposition a worthy the community, as there is e for meetings or for en- ment of the young people, ould have the support of n and community.

planning board was told by gion boys that the Legion not finance a building of e alone and that they would ise a good sum from the members, then call on the men of the town and lat- the community in general at they might be short. They this not a bad idea, be- if we start losing the young of the community eventual- n they grow up and have we won't have them com- our town.

ming it all up it's a commun- pposition, even to the people the country. Would you have your boys and girls entertainment in Klemme you might come with than to have them jump in and go all the way from 30 miles for their entertain-air of the Legion is to have uilding eventually equipped d clean entertainment, such ing, wrestling, a pool table ch other sports as the com- sees fit to put in. It is the the Legion boys to have nights for the young set eir entertainment and at all these nights will be under upervision. It's our idea to d build up the morals, health tizenship of the youngsters ing them clean sports. We feel as Legion members (from experience) that boys given a chance at clean sport will take to it rather than look for the unwholesome sport that is found in many communities where things are wide open.

The young girls will have access to this opportunity as well as the boys, under supervision of the Auxiliary members

We, the Legion and Auxiliary members would like to see this commnity hall come into being, and we will do our best to put it over

What will eventually become of the Legion Hall? It is the intention of the Legion post to pass this building onto the town when the last few living veterans of the post see fit to do so, provided there are no veterans of subsequent wars So after all we, the Legion and Auxiliary have no selfish motives in wanting a community hall

SWINE BREEDERS ARE TESTING METHODS OF HYBRID CORN MEN

Work Of 13 States Is Headed Up In Regional Laboratory At Iowa State College

Swine breeders at 13 Corn Belt experiment stations, working with the Federal Swine Research Laboratory, have pooled their efforts into one program—the largest animal breeding experiment ever attempted.

"The purpose of the laboratory and our research into animal breeding is aimed at seeing how far we can go in swine breeding along the road which the corn breeders have traveled," explains Dr. J. L. Lush, head of the animal breeding work at Ames.

Expect 750 Litters

Thirteen agriculaural colleges are enrolled in the project. The foundation stock for the experiment is expected to include at least 460 brood sows and 50 boars. An expected 750 litters of pigs will be raised in a single year.

More than a section of land—717 acres—has been set aside to house and pasture the hogs at the cooperating stations.

Different degrees of inbreeding, combined with the selection of parent stock, are the general principles the swine breeders expect to follow.

Cross Inbred Strains

"We plan to breed brother and sister in some cases, although most of our matings will be milder, and by this intensive inbreeding we hope to 'fix' important traits in our parent stock and to produce strains distinctly different from each other," Lush says.

"Then, for example, by crossing two strains with 'fixed' characteristics we hope to produce in the offspring the same high amount of vigor that is found in hybrid corn.

"Our ultimate hope is to develop strains of hogs that will be acceptable in type and prolificacy and will gain weight much faster and more economically than do our present breeds of swine."

Inbreds May Be Inferior Individuals

Lush fears, however, that their aims of developing strains which are superior individuals themselves, as well as being superior breeding stock, may not be attainable if inbred hogs react genetically the same as corn.

"All of the inbred strains of corn, so valuable in crossing to produce hybrid corn, are themselves inferior in yield and vigor to the original varieties of corn from which they were derived by inbreeding," Lush confirms.

"But even if the inbred strains of hogs we produce are themselves inferior, they might cross well on unrelated strains, as is the case in hybrid corn.

Farmers May Use Inbred Boars

"If we do not succeed in getting strains of hogs which are superior individuals themselves, such strains may still be of value for producing boars which will cross unusually well on outbred or unrelated sows.

"By alternating in the use of boars first from one such line and then from another, it may be possible for the commercial producer to gain from such lines.

"All that, of course, is still for the future to show us," he concludes.

In one sense this plan is not an entirely new kind of practice but is merely pure breeding pushed to the limit of intense breeding.

342-Acre Farm At Ames

Quantitatively, however, the amount of inbreeding in usual purebreeding practice is so very small that the results of the new plan may well be astonishingly different from the usual results of purebreeding.

The largest unit of the project is located here at Ames. By late in the fall of 1939 the Iowa station expects to have 200 sows and 15 boars on their specially equipped, 342-acre project farm.

Cooperative With U. S. D. A.

Work done at the various cooperating stations is being coordinated through the Regional Swine Breeding Laboratory, a unit of the United States Department of Agriculture, headed by Dr. W. A. Craft who is located at Ames

A large part of the equipment and general expenses is provided from federal funds under the Bankhead-Jones Act of 1935.

The farm, fences and permanent buildings will be the property of each cooperating experiment station.

The Klemme Shamrocks will journey to Hayfield, Friday night to stage a doubleheader basketball game The Shamrock Juniors will play the Hayfield Junior high in an opener.

The Shamrocks are taking no chances Friday night, but will carry the battle right from the start in an endeavor to earn another win.

They have won 12 out of 16 games played this year and will be out after number 13 when they tangle with the Goodellions next week.

The Vagabonds turned back the Goodell team 80 to 36 on the local floor last week, but it is expected that the southeners will have a much stronger line-up in the coming tussle.

The Vagabond reserves also have a fine season record and have won 8 out of 10 starts, winding up their season some three weeks ago at Rockwell.

Closer U. S.-Brazil Cooperation Predicted After Aranha Visit

By Joseph W. La Bine

EDITOR'S NOTE—When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of the news analyst, and not necessarily of the newspaper.

Pan-America

Chief reason for U. S. trade backwardness with Argentina is that both nations sell cotton, wheat, corn and beef. Even as Secretary of State Cordell Hull mused over an Argentine announcement that U. S. imports must be reduced, another South American nation made an opposite overture. From Brazil (biggest South American nation in point of size, population and resources) came Dr. Oswaldo Aranha, foreign minister, to spring a pleasant surprise.

Whereas modern Latin American nations have traditionally complained of U. S. "dollar diplomacy," Dr. Aranha openly invited American commercial participation in Brazil's development. His complaint: "Brazil needs, in order to bring about a rapid development of its wealth, the collaboration of an industrial country possessing an advanced technologic position, and I am sorry to say that this collaboration has not been offered heretofore by the United States."

If U. S. Pan-American advocates liked this, they liked Dr. Aranha's next statement even better: "Bolshevism, Fascism and Naziism are only different names for the same material conception of life which tries to replace God by the state, erected as the supreme aspiration of the individual. It is important that we in America should organize against the invasion of idealogies which are contrary to (our) basic ideals."

Since the U. S. and Brazil represent top-flight North and South American nations, it was immediately apparent that active trade cooperation between Washington and Rio would do more for hemispherical solidarity than a military alliance. Expected was a Brazilian loan from the Export-Import bank approximating $50,000,000, also important revisions in the existing trade agreement and settlement of the long-standing currency exchange problem.

International

In January Adolf Hitler told the Reichstag that "Germany must export or die." Britain's retaliation was creation of an export credit pool of $425,000,000. Price cutting and other forms of cut-throat competition often result in trade wars which end on the battlefield, a threat Britain recognized even while organizing her credit pool. A devotee of peace via negotiation, Prime Minister Neville Chamberlain consequently arranged a German-British trade conference which meets at Dusseldorf March 15 and may end in a U. S.-British-German agreement to regulate competition.

American industries are permitted to participate in cartels by the Webb-Pomerene act. On the eve of Dusseldorf's conference the state department intimated some 25 U. S. industries were readying themselves to discuss such plans. Once this three-corner agreement is completed, French, Scandinavian and Swiss industries will be drawn into the cartel immediately.

Though American participation in the plan apparently comes close to "appeasement" of Germany as advocated by Mr. Chamberlain, the state department would rather make sensible recognition of the Reich's place under the sun than fight upset of its reciprocal trade program by Germany's much-despised barter system.

Treasury

Heading southward to help the fleet ward off an imaginary aggressor from Europe, President Roosevelt told reporters business and industry need have no fear of new taxes, new U. S. competition in the power field or spending beyond budget needs. A few minutes later he challenged budget critics to explain how the government could toss away its red ink bottle without boosting taxes or eliminating "essential" federal functions.

If business need fear no new taxes, but if more taxes are needed to balance the budget, the President was (1) contradicting himself; (2) hinting that small taxpayers could expect new levies, or (3) stating indirectly that he had no plans for an early balanced budget.

In the light of figures the treasury had released one day earlier, Mr. Roosevelt's remark was more depressing. During 1938-39's first seven and one-half months the U. S. spent $5,616,760,015, or $90,000,000 more than the entire estimated receipts for 12 months. Since receipts to date are only $3,542,601,869, total seven and one-half month deficit is $2,074,158,146. If spending continues as expected, reaching almost $9,500,000,000 by June 30, the year's total deficit will approximate four billion dollars.

Utilities

Until early February only one-half of Tennessee's power came from the Tennessee Valley authority. Then Wendell L. Wilkie, stormy petrel of Commonwealth and Southern, agreed to sell his firm's Tennessee electric properties. For the first time in its campaign to acquire choice Tennessee power fields, TVA recognized common stock value in utility financial structures. Ten days later TVA rode again, this time into Memphis, where Memphis Power and Light company sold most of its facilities to TVA and the city for $17,360,000. M. P. & L.'s competitor, a city-owned corporation, gets its electric and natural gas distribution business. Taking stock, TVA now finds it has all Tennessee as a non-competitive power market except for upper eastern areas served mainly by small private utilities. All the state's principal cities — Memphis, Nasvhille, Chattanooga and Knoxville—are included in the fold.

Georgia

Long before he zoomed to secretaryship of the Democratic national committee, L. W. (Chip) Robert Jr. was a prominent Georgia building contractor. One of his jobs was the $5,000,000 addition to Milledgville's state hospital, for which Robert's firm got 6 per cent as a fee. This session, Georgia's legislature began looking for skeletons to drag from the Robert closet. Chief skeleton-draggers were Dougherty county's Rep. Delacey Allen and Valdosta's Rep. H. B. (Hell Bent) Edwards.

Going home from Washington to defend himself, Chip Robert first heard Mr. Allen say he had stolen the taxpayers' money on his Milledgville contract. Next Mr. Allen charged Chip Robert had resigned his assistant U. S. treasury secretaryship "to avert a national scandal" after G-men had "gotten on his trail" regarding Atlanta engineering activities.

Next day Mr. Robert hurried to Dougherty county and filed charges of slander against Representative Allen. Returning, he found Hell Bent Edwards waving his arms from the house floor and talking like this:

"It's a shame on the state that we've got such a man as Chip Robert. It's a shame on the national Democratic party that they allow Chip Robert to do like this. And it's a shame on the President of the United States that he has allowed Chip Robert to do what he has done."

TELEVISION — Philadelphia manufacturers predict a limited number of television receivers will be placed on sale in May, with six broadcasting stations in operation.

FORTS—Japanese are reported building underground defenses like France's Maginot line along Russian frontier in Inner Mongolia.

COMMUNISM—Paris' Communist paper, L'Humanite, predicts outlawry of Communism, restrictions on freedom of press and assembly and limitation of the rights of parliament following April's presidential election.

RAILROADS — U. S. carloadings in mid-February hit 579,918 a week, 6.8 per cent greater than in the corresponding 1938 week.

Pensions

Last time he was called before a congressional committee, Pensioneer Dr. Francis E. Townsend refused, ending up with a 30-day jail sentence for contempt. President Roosevelt pardoned him, business got better and pension talk dwindled. But last summer Townsendism and a colorful assortment of other old age assistance plans blossomed with Recession. The administration fought this November election threat by promising to amend social security, but by the time congress assembled it was obvious pensioneers would have their say.

This time Dr. Townsend appeared as political theorist, economist and patriot before the house ways and means committee, defending his plan to provide up to $200 a month to persons over 60 by a 2 per cent transaction tax.

DR. FRANCIS TOWNSEND

Said Political Theorist Townsend: "If we can't establish a higher standard of living for the submerged one-half of our people than $40 a month, then certainly we're not going to be able to maintain our type of government much longer.

Said Economist Townsend: "We have not scratched the surface of our wealth and productive ability." (He added that pensions might eventually be boosted to $300 a month).

Said Patriot Townsend: "I wish you could hear the expressions of contempt against this great government of ours, a government I love and cherish with all my heart, a government I would die for . . . If this government is going to survive, it must not give occasion to these people."

Crux of Dr. Townsend's argument is that the profit system needs overhauling to avoid a spread of subversive agitation prompted by poverty. Well do committeemen know that U. S. poverty breeds ill will, but there is serious doubt that Townsendism will receive congressional precedence over the social security revision plans President Roosevelt offered several weeks ago, and which the California doctor terms "the height of absurdity."

Defense

Last December President Roosevelt's arms expansion program had more foes than friends in the still-to-convene seventy-sixth congress. Two months later it had more friends, thanks to clever White House publicity maneuvers and a lot of saber-rattling in Europe. The house passed 367 to 15 an administration bill to spend $376,000,000 extra on defense the next two years. (Same day, Great Britain voted about $1,000,000,000 more for arms.) Chief features are boosting the army's aviation force to 5,500 first line planes and making the Panama canal impregnable. Certain of passage was the Vinson naval expansion bill to spend $68,000,000 on naval air and submarine bases.

But there was little unity in this new strength. Closely allied to rearmament is the problem of U. S. military alliances with other democracies, since the threat that inspired American rearmament is the same threat that makes France and Britain jittery. After a California air crash revealed U. S. manufacturers were selling military planes to France, after President Roosevelt denied telling a senate military affairs committee that U. S. "frontiers are in France," the White House-congress foreign policy debate came out in full bloom. Questions: (1) Shall the U. S. keep its foreign policy secret? (2) Is President Roosevelt risking involvement in war through secret international deals?

After a week's debate there presumably were no longer any secrets about either the French deal or the administration's foreign policy. Actual cause of the rumpus was apparently removed, but not congressional resentment.

Thundered California's Sen. Hiram Johnson: "No epithets applied to senators or newspapers will relieve the situation of its secrecy . . . There is resentment among the administration that anybody should ask the facts. But if there comes a war it will not be fought by the President alone . . ."

Facts themselves are startling. Faced with U. S. military orders under the new defense bill, plane manufacturers already have their hands full with export orders. Starting with $25,000,000 in 1936, plane exports have roughly doubled annually, approximating $200,000,000 this year. In the past eight months France and Britain have ordered 1,200 ships. Chief congressional wonder is which orders will get precedence, U. S. or foreign.

REMEMBER "June Moon"? It's going to return to the screen probably as "Lover Come Back to Me," with Nelson Eddy as its star, and perhaps with Miliza Korjus appearing opposite him. This is just one of the old pictures that will bob up before long in new versions. "Morocco," for instance, the first picture that Marlene Dietrich made in this country, with Gary Cooper as her leading man. Most of us think that it was also her best one. There may be a new "Show Boat." In fact, most of your old favorites will be back, for Hollywood is playing safe and brushing off many of the scripts that brought the public to the box office once upon a time.

Given different directors, stars and sets, they'll practically be new pictures.

When you see "Captain Fury," (with Brian Aherne, Victor McLaglen, and June Lang,) you will see special dances that are authentic of the hectic period of American colonization in which the story is laid. You old-timers will recognize Betty Blythe as the wife of a colonial secretary; she is one of the stars of the silent screen who still likes to appear before a camera occasionally.

There'll be old fashioned dances in "Wutherine Heights," too. The dance director who's responsible for them is Jack Crosby, who once was a cowboy, and then was a railroad fireman.

"Dancing Daughters" made a star of Joan Crawford, and may do the same for Virginia Grey. Metro is going to give her a chance at it, at least. And since the original version appeared in 1928, a new screen audience has grown up who won't feel homesick for Joan when they see the 1939 one.

The European market for films may be shot to pieces, but the Latin-American one is more important than ever. Movita, the Mexican actress who was last seen in "Rose of the Rio Grande," will have the same sort of role in "The Girl From Rio," and will sing songs in both English and Spanish.

RKO is whipping up "The Girl From Mexico" with Lupe Velez as the Star. No doubt all the other companies will blossom out with pictures intended to please our good neighbors in South America before the year is over.

Kay Francis will appear on the air in a full length play for the first time in March. She has made few broadcasts in the past, but may turn to radio more frequently if she sticks to her decision to turn her back on the movies.

Gabriel Heatter leaped into national prominence as a commentator when he handled the Hauptmann trial, although he'd been doing an excellent job long before that. Paul Whiteman just happened to hear Joan Edwards singing one day in a music publisher's office, and engaged her to sing with his band. Mark Warnow was a violinist in an orchestra that accompanied Morton Downey. One day the leader was ill, and Warnow substituted for him, with the result that Downey insisted that he conduct all his broadcasts from that time on.

What to Eat and Wh

Advice to Homemakers on How to Feed Families Duri Coldest Days of Winter; Essential Nutritive Values Described in Terms of Everyday Foods

By C. HOUSTON GOUDISS

TOWARD the end of winter we sometimes experien some of the coldest weather of the entire season. Te peratures remain below freezing for days at a time. The is often raw and penetrating, and blustery winds make seem as if man is being persecuted by nature.

Moreover, this trying weather comes after months of sho and often sunless days . . . days which many people hav spent in overheated houses, and without sufficient exercise. So it is no wonder that the body is on trial . . . fighting to maintain health . . . to avoid the colds and other respiratory diseases that are so prevalent. This is, perhaps, one season when food has a mightier power than at any other time to influence physical well-being.

Food Your First Defense

In general, women seem to be more aware of the power of food than men. This is fortunate, because they are charged with the solemn responsibility of determining what foods their families shall eat. Since the right food sometimes makes the difference between sickness and health their husbands and children are the unhappy losers if they fail to recognize the need for even one essential food substance.

Occasionally the homemaker's task is made more difficult by men-folks who pooh-pooh the idea that meals should be planned scientifically, and who point out that generation after generation survived without a specific knowledge of nutrition.

People who hold this view fail to take into consideration that many of our ancestors consumed a satisfactory diet without knowing it.

Safeguarding Health

They should realize also that one can suffer from dietary deficiencies and live . . . though he may not live well! A man can exist upon much less than the amount of iron required for normal health . . . but he probably cannot escape secondary anemia. He may be able to get along on a meager supply of vitamins . . . but the chances are that his vitality will be greatly diminished. And he will face the constant threat of disease that follows in the wake of lowered resistance.

Nothing is more foolish than to suppose that what a man eats is entirely his own business! It is a matter of grave concern to his wife and children. For it has been suggested that fully one-half of the illnesses of the American people may be traceable directly, or indirectly, to dietary deficiencies. Let no man, therefore, twit his wife for trying to feed him correctly!

Time for Good Eating

But don't imagine for a moment that correct eating and good eating cannot be synonymous. It is true that there is no time of year when correct eating is more important. But it is also a fact that there is no time of year when good eating is more distinctly indicated!

These are the days when breakfasts must be especially hearty . . . to satisfy keen appetites, to provide generous amounts of fuel or energy values. That means cereals always, and some form of breadstuff, pancakes or waffles.

Cereals are primarily energy foods, but they may also carry substantial amounts of precious mineral salts and vitamin B. Whole grain varieties are also a good source of bulk or cellulose . . . so necessary for regular health habits . . . so often overlooked in diets that are carelessly planned.

Eggs belong on the breakfast menu, too, because they are a top-notch protective food. And there must be fresh or stewed fruit—for vitamins, minerals and roughage.

Balancing the Big Meal

Whether the main meal of the day is served at noon or at night, it should be well-balanced, to help safeguard health, and appetizing, to make it so enjoyable that it will be digested efficiently.

It should be built first of all around a protein food: meat; fresh, canned, or quick-frozen fish; cheese, chicken, an egg dish, or a casserole of hearty baked beans. There should be an energy food such as sweet or white potatoes, rice, macaroni, or noodles, though frequently this can be combined with the protein food, as in cheese macaroni or beef stew. For variety and palate pleasure, occasionally serve baked bananas. They rank as an energy food, and also contribute important minerals and vitamins.

Vegetables—Raw and Cooked

There should be vegetables—one or two of them. Green leafy vegetables, either fresh or canned, should be served several times a week . . . for their iron and vit mins A, B, G, and sometimes These may be alternated with t yellow vegetables which are pa ticularly notable for their vitam A. Don't overlook onions—th are inexpensive, and a fine sour of bulk. Served raw, they provi a substantial amount of vitamin the vitamin for which we esp cially prize oranges, grapefru and tomatoes.

Include a salad at dinner, lunc or supper; it is well for most no mal individuals to eat some ra food daily. In cold weather, dre it generously with salad dressin for extra fuel value.

Dessert may be pie, pudding gelatin. The choice depends par ly upon the other foods served dinner, partly upon the desse to be served at the third meal the day. But here is a good ge eral rule to follow. Serve a fru dessert at one meal—and a pu ding containing milk at the othe Of course, the fruit need not b served plain unless you wis Fruit pies are splendid for co weather meals, fruit and gelati combine nicely, and fruit may b incorporated in cakes, as in appl sauce cake.

Rounding Out Day's Nutrition

Whether the third meal of th day is lunch or supper in you household, it should round out th day's nutrition. If you need get more milk into the diet, l your lunch or supper include cream soup. If you haven't serve eggs previously during the da choose a souffle or a dish contain ing creamed eggs. A starch food, a salad, a dessert and a bev erage will complete a meal tha both satisfies the appetite an meets nutritional requirements.

It is not difficult to obtain th day's quota of minerals, vitamin cellulose, protein, carbohydrate and fats. These substances ar to be found in delicious, whole some foods. All you need to re member is not to serve too muc of one food and too little of a other.

Let the balanced diet be you ideal—and cold weather will prov a tonic instead of a possible men ace to health!

Common Sense About Constipation

A doctor would tell you that the best thing to do with constipation is get at its cause. That way you don't have to endure it first and try to cure it afterward—you can avoid having it.

Chances are you won't have to look far for the cause if you eat the super-refined foods most people do. Most likely you don't get enough "bulk"! And "bulk" doesn't mean a lot of food. It means a kind of food that isn't consumed in the body, but leaves a soft "bulky" mass in the intestines.

If this is what you lack, try crisp crunchy Kellogg's All-Bran for breakfast. It contains just the "bulk" you need.

Eat All-Bran every day, drink plenty of water, and "Join the Regulars." Made by Kellogg's in Battle Creek. Sold by every grocer.

Two Americans Have Been Called "President-for-a-Day" But Their Right to That Honor Is Doubtful

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON
© Western Newspaper Union.

NINETY years ago this month the United States had a President for one day—that is, it had if you believe the inscription on a statue which stands in Plattsburg, Mo. His name was David Rice Atchison and the statue was erected in 1928 because many Missourians believed that he was entitled to the distinction of being listed among the Chief Executives of the nation even though that claim to fame is based up on a technicality. Here is how it came about:

Technically, President James K. Polk's term of office expired on March 3, 1849, and, according to custom, his successor, Gen. Zachary Taylor should have been inaugurated on March 4. But March 4 came on a Sunday and because of this fact Taylor did not take the oath of office until Monday, March 5.

According to the familiar story, based upon a contemporary statement in the Congressional Globe, on March 3 George M. Dallas, vice president under Polk, announced in the senate, over which he was presiding, "The close of my official term being near at hand, I conform to an established and convenient practice by withdrawing from the deliberations of this body." Thereupon Senator Thomas Hart Benton of Missouri moved that his colleague, Senator David R. Atchison, be appointed president of the senate pro tem.

Since the terms of President Polk and Vice President Dallas expired on March 3 and the term of President-elect Taylor did not begin until March 5, when he was inaugurated, it has been contended that Atchison was legally President for that one day, Sunday, March 4, 1849, even though he was not sworn in. This claim was based upon the presidential succession act, passed in 1792, which provided that in case of the death, removal, resignation or inability of both the President and the vice president, the president of the senate should act as President until "the disability be removed or a President shall be elected."

An early edition of the Biographical Congressional Directory, 1774-1911, backed up this claim by saying about his election as president of the senate pro tem "This office made him President of the United States during Sunday, March 4, 1849, as General Taylor was not sworn into office until the following day," and the official Missouri manual for 1928 declared that he was "technically President of the United States until after the formal inauguration of President Taylor March 5."

Not Legally President.

However, a later edition of the Directory took the distinction away from him by eliminating any reference to his having been "President for a day." It says that he was "re-elected president pro tempore of the senate March 4, 1849, but this falling on Sunday, he did not qualify until Monday, March 5, 1849, and was therefore not legally president pro tempore on Sunday, March 4." Therefore he was not legally President of the United States, either.

Most historians support that view of the matter. They base their opinion upon the provision in the Constitution which requires that the President's oath of office shall be taken "before he enter upon the execution of his office" but not "before he shall become President." John Marshall, famous chief justice of the Supreme court, once declared that "the term of the actual President will expire and that of the President-elect commence at 12 in the night of the third of March." Therefore James K. Polk was President until midnight, March 3, 1849, and on the stroke of that hour Zachary Taylor became President even though he did not take the oath of office until two days later.

Atchison's friends claimed for him not only the honor of having been President for a day but also that he was "the only President who had never been elected to either that office or the vice-presidency; the only President from a state west of the Mississippi river and the only President who never signed his name as such." The claim in regard to the vice presidency is somewhat more valid than that of "President for a day." It was based upon these facts:

When Franklin Pierce became President in 1853 Atchison was still a member of the senate. William R. King, who was elected vice president with Pierce, died in Cuba before he could be sworn into office and act as presiding officer of the senate. Atchison was chosen president pro tempore, which made him presiding officer of that body and as such was "acting vice president." As for the statement that he was "the only President from a state west of the Mississippi" that, of course, was no longer valid when Herbert Hoover was elected in 1928.

As a matter of fact, Atchison had a career distinguished enough to guarantee his being remembered, even without the claim that he had been "President for a day." Born at Frogtown, Fayette county, Kentucky, on August 11, 1807, he was named for David Rice, a pioneer Presbyterian minister in that state, because his father, a man of strict religious convictions, hoped the boy would become a clergyman. However, young Atchison chose to become a lawyer and studied for that profession.

A Famous Senator.

Admitted to the bar in 1830, he began practicing in Liberty county, Missouri, and at the age of 27 he was elected to the state legislature. When he was 33 he was appointed judge of Platte county and within the same year he was appointed United States senator. For 14 years, from 1841 to 1855, he was one of the best-known members of the upper house of congress. Upon his retirement from public life he devoted his time to agriculture and died in Clinton county, Missouri, January 26, 1886.

Despite the fact that the "President for a day" distinction has been given to Atchison and a monument erected to him mainly because of it, he was not the only man for whom that claim could be made. In some respects it could more justifiably be applied to Thomas White Ferry, a United States senator from Michigan, when a situation similar to that of 1849 arose in 1877.

When Vice President Henry Wilson died in November, 1875, Ferry was chosen president pro tempore of the senate and as such was "acting vice president." He presided over the Hayes-Tilden electoral contest, at the impeachment trial of W. W. Belknap, secretary of war, and at 16 joint meetings of the two houses of congress. In the absence of President Grant, he further discharged the duties of his temporary office by formally opening the Centennial exposition at Philadelphia on July 4, 1876.

Grant's term of office expired at midnight on March 3, 1877. Normally, his successor, Rutherford B. Hayes, would have been inaugurated at noon on March 4. But again March 4 fell on a Sunday so Hayes did not take the oath of office until Monday noon, March 5. So by the same process of reasoning which gave Atchison the distinction of being "President for a day," Ferry, who was "acting vice president" was also a one-day President. At least one dictionary of American biography makes the assertion that Ferry was "President of the United States for the time intervening" between the end of Grant's term and Hayes' inauguration.

So if you are one of those who believe that David R. Atchison of Missouri was "President for a day" you should accord the same honor to Thomas White Ferry of Michigan!

Again it may be said that the man thus honored needs no such dubious distinction to make him memorable. For Ferry, like Atchison, had a distinguished career. He was born in Mackinac, Mich., June 1, 1826, the son of a Presbyterian minister who had established a mission to the Indians on the island of Michillimackinac. The father later moved to Grand Haven, Mich., where he acquired extensive holdings of timberland and engaged in the lumber business.

Young Ferry grew up under frontier conditions in that region with little opportunity for securing an education. For a time he was a clerk in a store in Elgin, Ill., then returned to Grand Haven to work for his father and brothers in the lumber business. Showing an aptitude for politics, he was elected a member of the board of supervisors and county clerk of Ottawa county on the Whig ticket when he was only 21 years old.

Two years later he was sent to the state legislature as a Republican and in 1856 to the state senate. Four years later he was Michigan's "favorite son" for the nomination as vice president and running mate with Abraham Lincoln but he lost out to Hannival Hamlin of Maine. When his term in the state senate ended he returned to the lumber business, although for eight years he was a member of the Republican state central committee.

A Lincoln Escort

In 1863 Ferry was appointed to represent his state on the board of managers of the National Soldiers' cemetery at Gettysburg and the following year he was elected to congress. He served as a member of the congressional committee which accompanied the body of the martyred Lincoln to Springfield, Ill., for burial and in 1866 he was a delegate to the loyalist convention in Philadelphia where he further increased his reputation by his able speeches.

Elected to congress three times as a representative, he was later advanced to the senate where he served two terms.

During Ferry's service in the senate he was chosen president pro tempore and after the death of Vice President Wilson was "acting vice president" which, as previously stated, led to the claim that he was "President for a day" between the administrations of Grant and Hayes. He was a candidate for re-election to the senate in 1882 but his efforts to win a third term resulted not only in his defeat but also in disaster to his lumber business which finally was placed in the hands of a trustee.

After this double disappointment, Ferry went abroad and spent three years in travel. He resumed his business operations upon his return but failed to recover his former prosperity. He never married and lived with an aunt until his death in Grand Haven on October 14, 1896.

Even though authorities on constitutional history will not allow David Rice Atchison and Thomas White Ferry the distinction of being "Presidents for a day," they probably will admit that there was another man who has a right to that title IF the claim is made with certain reservations. His name was Samuel Johnston and he came from North Carolina.

"Never heard of him!" you exclaim. Probably not, but the fact remains that he was an American President for just one day, July 9, 1781—but, let it be added immediately, he was "President of the United States in Congress Assembled" or "President of the Continental Congress Under the Articles of Confederation." And that is very different from "President of the United States of America."

Samuel Johnston

The Articles of Confederation were adopted by the Continental congress on November 15, 1777. They did little more than put into definite written form the principles on which the new nation, brought into being by the Declaration of Independence, had theretofore been conducted. But, at least, they were a start toward a framework of government.

Two days later these articles were sent to the various states with a plea for their speedy adoption. Some of the states assented to this readily enough, some ratified the articles with certain reservations, while others, led by Maryland, held back until their views in regard to disposing of western lands should be agreed to. Finally on March 1, 1781, the Maryland delegates to congress, John Hanson and Daniel Carroll, placed their signatures on the document.

At this time Samuel Huntington of Connecticut was President of the Continental congress, having been chosen to that office on September 28, 1779. There was no new election of a President when the articles were finally ratified on March 1 and on July 6 President Huntington gave notice to his colleagues that the state of his health would no longer permit him to serve in that office.

Declined the Honor.

So on July 6 congress chose as his successor Samuel Johnston of North Carolina. Evidently Johnston didn't care for the honor, for on the following day he offered his resignation, offering "such reasons as were satisfactory," according to the contemporary record, and his resignation was accepted. Thus he became the "President for a day" of the Continental congress and, in accordance with the manner in which such officers signed documents (although there is no record that he signed one) was "President of the United States in Congress Assembled."

On July 10, the day Johnston resigned, Thomas McKean of Delaware was chosen President of congress and served until John Hanson was elected as his successor on November 5, 1781. Hanson was elected for a definite term of one year and served from November 5, 1781, to November 4, 1782. Because of this fact and because it is said that the Articles of Confederation, "the first Constitution of the United States," did not come into effect until his election, the claim has been made that John Hanson, rather than George Washington, should be regarded as the "first President of the United States."

John Hanson

This theory was pretty effectively demolished during the Washington bicentennial celebration in 1932 when the Carnegie Institution of Washington issued an article by Dr. Edmund C. Burnett of the institution's division of historical research which bore the title of "Who Was the First President of the United States?" After considering all the evidence in regard to Hanson's right to be considered the first President, Doctor Burnett says:

"The evidence is conclusive that no president of the Continental congress, by whatever name it may be designated, whether 'the congress,' as it first called itself, or 'the United States in congress assembled,' as it came later to be called, was ever President of the United States. And this is true for this best of reasons, among others: because no such office as President of the United States existed until it was created by the federal constitution, framed in 1787 and adopted in 1788.

"There is therefore only one rational conclusion that can be reached, and that is, that George Washington was the first President of the United States."

A Braided Rug That Grew Up With Family

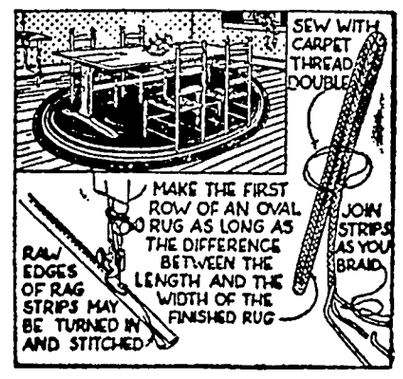
By RUTH WYETH SPEARS

"DEAR MRS. SPEARS: The leaflet on making Rag Rugs that just came with your two books is most interesting to me, and I thought you might like to know about a rag rug that I made, and added more rows to from time to time.

"I save the best parts of old sheets and dye them different colors; then tear them into one-inch strips. I have a power machine,



SEW WITH CARPET THREAD DOUBLE
MAKE THE FIRST ROW OF AN OVAL RUG AS LONG AS THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN THE LENGTH AND THE WIDTH OF THE FINISHED RUG
JOIN STRIPS AS YOU BRAID
RAW EDGES OF RAG STRIPS MAY BE TURNED IN AND STITCHED

so I run these through it turning in the raw edges. The stitching strengthens the strips and makes them firm and neat for braiding."

If this letter inspires you, I have made a sketch here showing how to start your room size rug. If you are not quite that ambitious, you will find many ideas for smaller rugs in the leaflet offered below.

NOTE: Now is the time for all of us to give our houses a fresh start. Crisp new curtains; a bright slipcover; new lampshades; or an ottoman will do the trick. Make these things yourself. Mrs. Spears' Book 1—SEWING, for the Home Decorator, shows you how with step-by-step, easy to follow sketches. Book 2—Gifts, Novelties and Embroidery, shows you how to make fascinating things from odds and ends and will save its cost many times. Books are 25 cents each; if you order both books, copy of the new Rag Rug Leaflet will be included free. Address Mrs. Spears, 210 S. Desplaines St., Chicago, Ill.

"HABITS"

A persons habits will either make or brake his character In other words good habits will build good character and bad habits will not prove constructive to good character.

Bad habits will be found to be a detriment to those who possess them and perhaps a menace to others with whom the bad habit former comes in contact.

A habit is formed when one's mannerisms settle into a custom or practice of common usage. They oftimes become so common that we don't realize how we are behaving. We may have been unknowingly exercising our bad habits, and perhaps in the presence of others who we would like to have think differently of us. We must therefore be self-concious enough to know what we are doing at least part of the time during which we are awake. Know whether your actions add to or detract from your character. That is the only way you will be able to better yourself. Habits are sure to reveal your disposition or the prevailing character of your thoughts and feelings. Habits constitute the mental make-up of the individual. Some consolation may be found in the fact that most everyone is good while asleep, even the bad boy.

Now is the time to form your good habits and reform your bad ones. The habits you form during youth will stick with you throughout life, just like a flea on a dogs back. A dog despises the flea or fleas, as the case may be. So in comparison why should we cherish and entertain bad habits. A flea likes a dog as well as bad habits like us. These bad habits are just waiting for an opportunity to plant themselves on us and they will if we give them half a chance. The best toxin to use in the prevention of obtaining these annoying, worthless habits is found in reputable and serviceable habits. —LaRayne Stille.

By H. A. Grantham

Opinions expressed herein are those of the writer and should not be construed as reflecting the policy of the Republican State Central Committee, any individual or group, or the newspaper in which this column appears.

BACK AGAIN

Back on the job again after a week at home Iowa legislators face the busiest period of the present session More than 1,000 bills have already been proposed in the House and Senate and even though the rules prohibit the introduction of additional bills except through committee, anywhere from 150 to 200 more bills may be expected From now on until the close of the session more time will be available for the actual consideration of legislation and more tangible results will be visible Powerful steering and sifting committees will be in operation and the many newcomers to both houses are going to be given a demonstration of what happens to proposed legislation which does not strike the committee as important

APPOINTMENTS

Entirely aside from the fact that it marks the real start of legislative procedure this week is being watched closely by thousands of Iowans interested in the personnel of various important state departments and institutions The week will see Governor Wilson sending to the senate many important appointments. First among these major appointments are three members to the Social Welfare Board Then follows probably in relatively rapid succession, the Governor's choices for the Highway Commission, Liquor Control Commission, Board of Control, Board of Assessment and Review, Board of Parole, Board of Education and many others. Reorganization and consolidation plans may delay a few of these appointments somewhat but not many of the major bureaus and commissions will be affected by reorganization legislation now in the making.

ROADS

Tangled up in the mild controversy over the alleged diversion of funds to finance a system of farm-to-market roads is a difference of opinion over the method at arriving on a common ground. Governor Wilson campaigned vigorously with a farm-to-market plan in his famous 10-points and the entire Republican administration is frankly determined to create such a secondary road program.. Newspapers in some sections of the state have attacked the method. As a matter of fact the mechanics of the proposal constitute the only point in argument Factions opposed to use the primary road funds in any amount to a secondary road program allege betrayal of country road bond pledges and dangle a boogey-man of lost Federal aid before those who support the current proposal.

NO DANGER

On the other hand proponents of the primary road fund use in secondary road development point out that nearly $18,000,000 is collected into the primary road fund each year. They reduce their statements to pure mathematics by pointing out that about $4,225,000 is required annually for maintenance; $1,400,000 for engineering expenses and another $8,250,000 for bond retirement and interest requirements. In round figures these annual requirements total about $14,000,000 There is unquestionably a growing resistance against the expenditures of an annual balance for extensions of paved roads and particularly for rerouting of paved roads around towns and cities; admittedly a service of value to through traffic but growing more and more in disfavor with communities who feel they are cut off main roads. The pros of current farm-to-market roads believe the state will be benefited more by the creation of all-weather secondary roads than by extensions and elaborations not considered imperative in the primary program.

RUBBER CHECKS

The road is growing rougher and rougher for the rubber check artist. Senator Faul, Polk County Republican, has introduced a bill which would provide a penitentiary sentence for fourth conviction of the offense of false drawing a check under 20 in amount. A vicious custom, with business houses the chief sufferers, rubber checks have become a serious problem The last legislature passed laws which did much to curtail the practice but if Senator Faul's current proposal is passed, deliberate attempts to defraud accomodating friends and acquaintances will become less frequent.

NO ASSESSMENTS

The Republican State Central Committee has very definitely declined to build a campaign fund through coercion of workers or an assessment on the salaries of state employees. The Republican state organization has announced that it will continue to depend entirely upon voluntary contributions of individuals and groups. Experience has proven that many modest contributions are preferable to a few larger donations since the latter often carry implied obligations. There will be no official objection to voluntary participation of employees in the political fortunes of their superiors. However, there will be no bidding for jobs and no contribution, however voluntary, can be viewed as job insurance for the inefficient worker.

CRACK DOWN

With Governor George A. Wilson and a belligerent Executive Council alert to public need, payroll padding and similar careless regard for common honesty in public service are on mighty slippery ground. The city of Knoxville recently objected a bill filed by a checker who made an audit of the city's records, on the ground that while it was not customary for the city government in Knoxville to function Saturday afternoon, the checker of the former state administration claimed pay for seven half days. State Auditor Aker's office immediately concurred in the objection and although the checker involved had left the service in the face of the incoming Republican regime, he voluntarily repaid the amount involved. That this was no stage play is evident in another similar incident concerning a Republican appointee employed since last January 2. He took some thoughtless liberties of a minor nature and was promptly bounced. Political affiliation didn't help him any.

TAG ENDS

Clerks in the Governor's office handle the commissions and related matters for 15,000 Iowa notaries public. . . . .state checkers audited the books of the Osceola school district recently in five days the same job losted four weeks last year. . . . .a job on the highway patrol is the ambition of many Iowa youngsters. . . . . the marshall in most Iowa small towns draws a larger salary. . . . . three members of the President's cabinet have appeared in Iowa during the past few weeks. . . Secretaries Perkins, Hopkins and Wallace. . . wonder if they are thinking about 1940. . . . .

Machine Gun Maestro

MOST men have to decide early in life whether they want to become soldiers of fortune or stay home and make money in business. Sam Dreben never could make up his mind. But he was successful at both.

His record was only ordinary in the Philippine insurrection, the Boxer rebellion in China and the La-Guardia campaign in Honduras. But that was because he hadn't yet laid his hands on a machine gun.

In 1912, when Gen. Campa led an uprising against the Mexican government, Dreben joined the rebels. Near Parral, when Gen. Campa's son was killed in front of him, the rebels' morale broke and they began to retreat in confusion.

Only pudgy Sam Dreben remained calm. He sat at a machine gun and covered the retreat with a constant hail of bullets that permitted the rebel troops to take up an orderly position in the rear.

When the revolution was put down, he crossed the border to El Paso and made a small fortune selling guns. But Huerta led an uprising against Villa and Dreben decided to go to the latter's defense. Sitting astride his famous machine gun at Bachima pass, he held off the Huerta forces. Single handed he delayed them until Villa could reorganize his troops and turn a retreat into a victory. Then he returned to El Paso again and made a half million dollars in Green Monster copper stock!

Although Sam was rich and almost 40 when we entered the World war, he enlisted. Leading a group of doughboys, he silenced a menacing German machine gun emplacement in a battle near Etienne. Forty Germans had to be killed before his mission was accomplished and Dreben killed 23 of them himself.

For that feat, General Pershing himself pinned the Distinguished Service Cross on Dreben's already medal-heavy chest.

Lee Christmas

WHEN Lee Christmas was engineer for the Yazoo & Mississippi railroad, he got into a scrape and was sent to jail. His fellow trainmen dynamited the building and got him out. That's how his adventurous life happened, literally, to start with a bang!

Pursued, he stowed away on a ship for Honduras. There was a war going on when he got there and he joined the army. It was a wise choice of vocation—he was rapidly promoted through every rank including general.

Then he went to Guatemala and got into another fracas. No dynamiting was necessary this time, however, as he shot the officer and several members of the group that were sent to arrest him. Then the entire army was called upon to capture him.

Running through side streets, he saw the rear door of an unguarded armory open, ran in and barricaded himself. He found more than a thousand rifles, plenty of ammunition and many loopholes. He went around the building for a day and a half, firing as fast as he could from one hole after the other. Not only did he give the impression that he was more than one man, but he actually killed about 80 soldiers.

He didn't come out until, of all things, they offered him not only his liberty but a commission in the army.

He won 36 big battles in Central America and even went so far as to start a revolution of his own in Honduras—and won it. Later he succeeded in getting into the United States army intelligence service with an assignment to Central America. In 1923 he died peacefully in a hospital in New Orleans.

Varmint Killer No. 1

HE HAD keen eyes, steady nerves, infinite patience and knew no fear; it was natural that Ben Lily should love big game hunting. But it was only because he became one of America's most dependable hunters that he was employed by the United States biological survey to kill mountain lions.

Ben began to hunt in Louisiana when he was a child not much taller than the length of his rifle. Later in life he took Theodore Roosevelt through the Louisiana canebrakes on a hunting trip. Then he trailed big game in Mexico, up in the Yukon and in the distant wilds of Canada. He even got to the jungles of Africa before working for the government in Arizona.

He worked in the Blue river section of the White mountains of Arizona protecting cattle from lions and bears. Ben worked all year 'round, traveling on foot with nothing but dogs for companionship.

In the Apache forest reserve alone Lily stalked and killed more than 150 mountain lions and two score "club-foots" besides. The mountain stock owners figure that each roving lion destroys $5,000 worth of cattle each year.

PETER DELIVERED FROM PRISON

LESSON TEXT—Acts 12:5-17.
GOLDEN TEXT—Prayer was made without ceasing of the church unto God for him.—Acts 12:5.

"Prayer Changes Things," says a popular motto. "More things are wrought by prayer than this world dreams of," is another much-used quotation. Still another is, "Satan trembles when he sees the weakest saint upon his knees." We say the words, but how often we fail to practice the truth. Prayer seems to be such an interesting topic for discussion, and yet so seldom do we really pray. The teaching of God's Word and the testimony of thousands of His children down through the centuries, yes, even our own experience, demonstrates that the greatest power for good that we can wield is prayer. God give us grace to use it in our daily walk and life and for His glory!

I. Prayer for a Prisoner (v. 5).

The members of the early Church knew what to do with their problems and troubles. They prayed. The same solution is available today. Whatever else we may do by way of planning and working, it must follow prayer if we are to succeed. We really cannot do anything else until we have prayed.

Troubles may be a blessing if they drive us to our knees. Peter was in jail for the gospel's sake. Prayer had been made for his deliverance, and yet the last night had come and he was still not free. However, his friends prayed on. God had given them faith to believe and the conviction that they should continue in prayer for him. Under such circumstances we must never cease to pray, even though the very "zero hour" has come. "Man's extremity is God's opportunity."

II. Deliverance by God (vv. 6-10).

God does answer prayer. Some presumably brilliant folk would have us believe that prayer is merely a subjective experience, a sort of spiritual exercise, which does the individual who prays certain good, but never reaches God or changes things. How would they explain what happened to Peter, and the hundreds of thousands of other definite prayer answers throughout the centuries?

The answer in Peter's case was so remarkable that even he thought he was only dreaming. Apparently God gave His persecuted servant sweet sleep that night, while He kept Peter's friends alert in prayer. But when Peter found himself outside the prison he knew something had happened.

There are many interesting things to note in this incident. Observe that what Peter could do for himself God did not do, but what Peter could not do, God's angel did. Note also that when God works, the spiritually unenlightened know nothing of it. The guards did not know what had happened until morning. Consider also that the angel took Peter as far as the open street, then left him to himself. God may meet a special need by miraculous intervention, but that does not mean that from then on we are to live by constant miracles. There are many practical and precious spiritual lessons which we may learn from these verses.

III. Results of Answered Prayer (vv. 11-17).

God does not answer prayer or perform any of His mighty works simply to make people marvel or to add to someone's comfort. It is true that He does thus manifest His loving consideration for us, and that men do marvel at His greatness, but there are other purposes in the workings of His grace and power.

In this case the first result was the freedom of His witness. He had been in prison and that was for God's glory; now he was to be free, and that too was to be for His glory.

Then, His deliverance was a great testimony, not only to those who were praying in the upper room, but to God's people down through the ages. Answered prayer is one of the great testimonies to the Christian faith.

Fellowship resulted from Peter's liberation. He went at once to meet with his fellow believers. Although he did not tarry long with them, he did share with them his remarkable experience, and admonished them to tell the others. If God has done something for you, share the good news with your brethren.

Service also resulted from this answer to prayer. Peter was not delivered that he should go about the city boasting that he was too strong for Herod's jail. Nor was it merely that he might go from place to place to lecture on his unusual experience. He was set free to go about his normal life of witnessing for Christ. We are "saved to serve." The normal expression of a life in Christ should be service for Him. God delivers us from trouble, sorrow, even death, that we may serve Him.

NATURE'S ODDITIES

The beaver is, without doubt, nature's champion woodsman. This animal's incisor teeth are ideal instruments for chipping wood, and have the additional advantage of being self-sharpened.

The front sides of the teeth are composed of a comparatively thin layer of very hard enamel, backed by softer dentine. As the teeth are used, the dentine wears away faster than the enamel, and with continued growth a sharp chisel edge tipped with enamel remains

Although the beaver is a rather timid, peace-loving animal, his teeth make formidable weapons in combat. These animals have been known to defeat carnivorous animals which ordinarily prey upon them.

SHAMROCKS LOST IN FIRST ROUND OF SECTIONAL PLAY

Stage Thrilling Come-back In Last Minutes To Lose By One Point

The Klemme Shamrocks lost out in the first round of the State Sectional basketball tournament at Clarion, Thursday night when they were defeated by Williams 27-28.

Williams jumped into an early lead and ended the first quarter ahead 8 to 5. The next quarter saw the Shamrocks crash in eight points against three for Williams and the Shamrocks were ahead 13 to 11 at the half way mark.

The third quarter was disasterous to the Shamrocks who were able to ring up only a lone field goal and a charity toss for three points while Williams sank four field goals and gathered three free throws for a total of eleven points and the Shamrocks trailed 16 to 22 as the last quarter came up.

Personal fouls depleted the Shamrock ranks and Grosshuesch, Katter and Wicks warmed the bench during the last quarter. However, the revamped team with Kluckhohn, Barz, Grange, Brinkman and Buseman in the line-up, sailed in five field goals and a free toss, while Williams found the hoop but once from the field and gathered four charity tosses for a total of six points.

Grosshuesch had managed to slide in one before he left the game, while Barz and Kluckhohn each banged in long ones from away out that nearly upset the Williams boys.

The Shamrock scoring spree started with 3½ minutes of playing time left when they trailed six points, but the rally came to late and Williams won by the lone point, 28 to 27.

Grooshuesch, Kluckhohn, Wicks and Katter were playing their last game for the Shamrock regulars and each turned in a good piece of work Barz topped the Shamrock scoring with 13 points, Kluckhohn had 7 and Grosshuesch also turned in 7

SHAMROCKS DOWN HAYFIELD TO EARN TIE IN CONFERENCE

Junior High Team Took 29 To 5 Victory From Hayfield Juniors

The Klemme Shamrocks journeyed to Hayfield, Friday night and with everything to win and everything to lose, took a hard fought battle from the Hayfield cagers by a score of 23 to 19. The victory threw the Sharmocks into a first place tie with Woden and closed the 1938-39 basketball season for the Seven Eagles Conference.

Hayfield sneaked into a one-point, 5 to 4 lead at the end of the first quarter and by the end of the half had increased it to 12 to 9. In the second half, however, the Shamrocks came out with a vengeance and gradually drew up on their opponents, taking a 15 to 13 lead at the end of the third period. In the final period the Shamrocks managed to stay out in front and increased their lead to 23 to 19 by the end of the game.

Kluckhohn, with his six long buckets from back of center, which netted him 12 points was the standout of the game and Grosshuesch was close behind with four field goals and a free throw for 9 points. Barz completed the Klemme scoring with a pair of free ones.

Sowder stood out for Hayfield as he rang up 4 field goals and 3 charity tosses for 11 points.

Junior High Wins

The local Junior High team trounced the Hayfield Juniors 29 to 5 and were out in front all the way. Grosshuesch and Brinkman led the scoring with 11 and 10 points, respectively. Leitzinger, who entered the game in the closing minutes, scored Hayfield's lone field goal. Their other three points were on free throws.

Shamrocks And Woden End Play In Tie For Conference Leadership

SEVEN EAGLES CONFERENCE RACE ENDS IN TWO WAY TIE

Klemme And Woden Will Each Receive A Trophy

With Hayfield's defeat by the Klemme Shamrocks Friday night, the last game on the Seven Eagles Conference resulted in a tie for first place between the Shamrocks and Woden, each team having two conference losses for the season.

No Play Off

A question that has been keeping local sports fans on edge for the past week or more was settled Tuesday when school authorities at Klemme and Woden agreed that there would be no play-off of the tie in the Seven Eagles Conference race. In making this decision, the conference leaders are following the example of the top teams in the neighboring North Iowa conference and are also following the suggestions of the other schools in the Seven Eagles group.

It was felt that a play-off game which would have to come after the state tournament would be an anti-climax to the high school basketball season. It was also pointed out that the conference championship is decided by standings in regular season play and that one team that had really earned first place would be deprived of the honor if the tie were played off.

Under the terms of the agreement, Klemme and Woden will both receive full size trophies naming them as co-champions of the conference.

4-H LEADERS MET ON WEDNESDAY EVENING

The following problems were discussed by the Hancock County boys 4-H club leaders at their meeting held Wednesday evening at the Farm Bureau office in Garner.

First the problem of boys not attending club meetings. The general opinion of the leaders was that the boys should attend at least 50 per cent of the club meetings held in their community, in order that they be eligible to show their livestock at the 4-H Club Achievement Show. Although there was not a definite ruling made to that effect it will be discussed again and probably something definite will be decided upon. It was thought by the leaders that just managing the project without regular attendance at the local club meetings, was not sufficient.

Another problem discussed was that of making the club meeting more interesting and having more boys participate in the programs A number of suggestions were made and the general opinion was that the boys should take a more active part in planning their own programs and that the club leaders and agents should supply the material to fit the boys needs or program, rather than make out a program for them. It was also suggested that more day time meetings would add to the interest that hte boys would take in the local meetings.

Of course this will take considerable cooperation from parents, schools and the boys.

Leaders attending the meeting were Walter Thorson, Amsterdam township; Addis Greiman, Ell township; Robert Guernsey, Bingham-Crystal townships; Carl Wille, Ell township; Frank Bredlow, Liberty township; Cark Clement, Ellington township and Paul Henderson club agent, conducted the discussions.

U. S. Refusal to Curb Spending Endangers 'Conciliation' Drive

By Joseph W. La Bine

EDITOR'S NOTE—When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of the news analyst, and not necessarily of the newspaper.

Business

Compared with 1923-25, December's federal reserve industrial index was 104. January's index dropped to 101 and there was no seasonal gain the first three weeks of February. Below-normal production reports came from industries like steel, automobile, silk, cotton and tobacco. Payrolls dropped and retail volume was off sharply. Secretary of the Treasury Henry Morgenthau Jr. said this was just a "breathing spell," but he and other administration leaders evidently thought otherwise. Since Harry Hopkins was appointed commerce secretary in December to replace Daniel C. Roper, unmistakable business conciliation efforts have been made. Among them:

Hopkins' Speech. At Des Moines Mr. Hopkins made his first major speech as secretary of commerce, announcing the New Deal's emphasis has shifted from reform to recovery. Promises: There will be no general tax rise this year; taxes which "freeze" the flow of capital will be amended; the profit system will be protected; small business, particularly, should be aided. But there was no hint of a change in the one U. S. policy that has done more than anything else to alienate business, namely, government spending. The Hopkins plan: Balance the budget and retire the debt with taxes coming at current rates from increased national income, rather than substantially increasing taxes at this time or reducing necessary expenditures.

Morgenthau Backwater. January 19 found Mr. Morgenthau telling a house appropriations committee that from $400,000,000 to $450,000,000 new taxes were needed this year; moreover that the U. S. public debt limit must be boosted from $45,000,000,000 (which will be reached by July 1, 1940) to $50,000,000,000 or more. The same day Mr. Hopkins spoke, however, Mr. Morgenthau told his press conference he still favored hiking the debt limit but that a no-new-tax policy had been adopted. Also, he asked congress to study the present tax structure with an eye to revisions. Many observers believe Mr. Morgenthau has been the New Deal's leading economy advocate all along, probably fathering the conciliation plan.

Congressional Hints. A pro-administration congress must shift its legislative program to satisfy White House whims. So must an insurgent congress shift to satisfy the nation. Part loyal and part insurgent, the seventy-sixth congress is now plotting a course to carry out Mr. Roosevelt's recovery suggestions first, then take another step to appease business. Scheduled for hearing: (1) repeal of the undistributed surplus tax, plus reduction in capital gains levy; (2) cut in expenditures, continuing the rebel policy that has already resulted in five consecutive slashes in administration appropriation bills; (3) revision of Wagner labor act to insure equal employer-employee rights; and (4) reduction in social security payroll taxes, with possible adoption of a pay-as-you-go system. Wyoming's Sen. Joseph C. O'Mahoney of the much-feared federal monopoly investigation committee has promised no general anti-monopoly legislation will be offered this session, giving business another incentive.

Labor Peace. Notoriously unsuccessful in settling differences between C. I. O. and A. F. of L., the U. S. labor department has been completely ignored in new administration gestures. Secretary Hopkins rightly maintains labor peace is a prerequisite to business upturn, so his department now takes the lead. Scheduled immediately is a peace parley probably with President Roosevelt in the arbiter's role, whose success would prevent a bitter factional fight over Wagner act amendments. Hearings open May 1. Chief stumbling block is that C. I. O.'s John Lewis offers a formula for chartering all C. I. O. unions by A. F. of L., or vice versa, leaving two opposing unions in many fields. A. F. of L.'s William Green denounces the plan as "impossible."

Sour Notes. Too many wary business men regard Mr. Hopkins' speech—keynote of the entire recovery campaign—not as a sincere administration gesture but as a political buildup for Mr. Hopkins' presidential nomination in 1940. By posing, sincerely or otherwise, as business' friend he is taking the only road now open if the administration hopes to gain a considerable support from business in the next election.

Disregarding the possibility of insincerity, other financial circles doubt the wisdom of continued U. S. spending. Most charitable Wall Street view is that New Deal theorists are belatedly discovering the impossibility of taxing a nation back to good times. Least charitable view is that of Manhattan's Guaranty Trust company, which minces no words about spending. While agreeing with Mr. Hopkins that an $80,000,000,000 annual national income is possible, Guaranty Trust maintains that this alone would be no index of prosperity. A better idea: To encourage private investment by a government policy which eschews federal spending via "long range investment" in wealth creating public works.

MICHIGAN'S VANDENBERG
He saw no tangible encouragement.

Echoed Michigan's Sen. Arthur H. Vandenberg, bitter New Deal critic and a 1940 possibility for the G. O. P.: "I am sorry to say there is no tangible encouragement in a speech (Mr. Hopkins') which waves the olive branch with one hand and indorses deficit spending on the other hand . . . If Mr. Hopkins will reduce his conversation to a concrete and helpful formula which means what it says, I think he can be sure of great hospitality in both congress and the country."

Transportation

Current legislative proposals to aid railroads rest mainly on the thesis that all transportation must be co-ordinated to eliminate favoritism and duplication of service. Even more pointed than bills fathered by California's Rep. Clarence F. Lea and Montana's Sen. Burton K. Wheeler is the proposal of the Association of American Railroads, just submitted to the house interstate commerce committee.

Its gist: All rail, water and motor transport systems would be regulated by a single federal agency. While the interstate commerce commission would continue to fix rates, financial and administrative functions would be vested in five $12,000-a-year men appointed by the President. The board's tasks: (1) to determine the "relative economy and fitness" of all carriers; (2) to ferret out reports of U. S. subsidies to common carriers other than the railroads.

Complained Attorney R. V. Fletcher, general counsel for the railroads: "Under present conditions there are no good times for the railroads. When earnings are not good we can't raise the rates and when they are good we are told that a rate increase would be contrary to a sound economic end."

Congress

Nebraska's Rep. John J. Cochran has fought steadily for President Roosevelt's ill-fated reorganization bill which failed last session amid charges of "dictatorship." Now before congress is a Cochran-sponsored compromise bill designed to eliminate last year's stumbling blocks. Its main points: (1) the President could propose plans for consolidation, abolition and transfers in the executive department, to be rejected by congress within 60 days via a concurrent resolution; (2) financial estimates of independent federal boards and commissions would reach the President via the budget bureau, as is now the case with other governmental departments; (3) the President could appoint six administrative assistants at $10,000 a year. One important safeguard is that such quazi-judicial agencies as the civil service commission, coast guard, federal communications commission and interstate commerce commission could not be reorganized.

Agriculture

Some 11,000,000 bales of surplus U. S. cotton are piled up under government loans of about $500,000,000. Though unhappy, cotton farmers voted for continued production control last December because they expected more loans. With planting time near and no substitute yet found for the present loan system (which cannot be continued economically so long as huge government-held surpluses fail to move), Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace offered three suggestions to the senate farm committee and ended by urging adoption of the last:

(1) Continue the present loan plan, provided American cotton can be placed on the unhappily low world market. One means of doing this is through U. S. subsidy.

(2) Abandon the loan plan and grant sufficiently large outright benefit payments to maintain farm income. Mr. Wallace's favorite method here is probably the ill-regarded processing tax.

(3) Peg domestic prices and sell surpluses abroad for whatever they would bring, as under the much-debated "cost-of-production" plan. Though cost-of-production has never held favor with Mr. Wallace, the impossibility of winning a return of processing taxes has presumably forced a compromise. The few known facts of the two-price cotton plan are that present loan provisions would be retained to maintain domestic prices higher than the present level (about 8.3 cents per pound), while government-owned cotton would be sold to exporters for world distribution.

Europe

Seldom has history found a conqueror who would retire to let others enjoy the sweet fruit of victory. Since 1932 Gen. Francisco Franco has grown in stature as Spain's man of destiny, at first unknown outside his native land but later an international figure as head of the Insurgent rebellion. With the civil war apparently ended, all Europe has looked to Spain for some hint of Generalissimo Franco's plans, discovering that the impossible is apparently true.

Best guesses hold that monarchy will return in the person of Don Juan, third son of former King Alfonso whose properties were restored last fall. Popular, untouched by the deadly haemophilia that plagues many Bourbons, Prince Juan would apparently rule with Ramon Serrano Suner, Franco's brother-in-law, who holds the best chance of becoming premier. Franco himself would retire to head the army.

But what appears an overgenerous gesture on Franco's part may be dictated by Rome. An Italian resident for several years, 25-year-old Don Juan would not only bow to Fascist wishes but would pacify hostile Spaniards as General Franco never could. Moreover such a puppet would be less apt to offer Britain a financial or political entree to the new Spain than would strong-willed, independent General Franco.

SPAIN'S PRINCE JUAN

Thus the Spanish solution fits perfectly into Italo-German anti-democracy plans, to be climaxed when Rome pushes Mediterranean territorial demands against France. Most astute piece of diplomatic maneuvering in recent weeks was the Polish junket of Count Galeazzo Ciano, Italian foreign minister. While Count Ciano did his best to destroy the already ineffectual Polish-French military alliance, 3,000 Italians were repatriated from French possessions, mobilization was sped and three new decree laws were effected, giving the government more wartime power.

Even so the Polish victory was small spoils beside the moral victory gained when Britain and France, standing up and barking back for the first time in three years, openly declared their solidarity and went busily ahead with military plans to the chagrin of Rome and Berlin. Another democratic victory took place in Poland even while Count Ciano was making his triumphal entry. Angry anti-Nazi demonstrations informed the count that while Poland might be his friend, it was not the friend of Count Ciano's Friend Hitler. As before, the key to Europe's future still rests in Spain, where a note from General Franco will place either a French-British or an Italian-German combination ace high. Unbelievably, a nation just emerging from civil war apparently holds the balance of power.

★ Directors Who Must In

By Virginia Vale

MICKEY ROONEY'S brief stay in New York was a lesson for older and more experienced screen stars, who wilt when they are faced by a long list of dates with interviewers. Mickey saw folks from the newspapers and really talked to them. He signed autograph books for mobs of fans. He dashed about town, going to theaters, hearing swing bands (that was one of the things he specially wanted to do while in New York) and dropping in at Madison Square Garden for a hockey game.

Mickey is quite a musician, you know. He plays the trumpet, trombone, piano and drums. He also composes songs—"Have a Heart" is his latest. Recently Mickey and Deanna Durbin were honored by the Motion Picture Academy of Arts and Science "for their significant contribution in bringing to the screen the spirit and personification of youth."

You'll be seeing him in "Huckleberry Finn," which he finished before leaving Hollywood for his brief vacation, and "The Hardys Ride High" is also ready for release. Those Hardy pictures will go on forever, apparently.

Joan Bennett likes the way she looks when she's a brunette, although she didn't find it out until she saw herself in the black wig she wore for "Trade Winds." And people all over the country wrote to her saying that they preferred her with dark hair. So she'll don a wig again for "The Man in the Iron Mask," in which she's slated for a leading role.

It's a rare director who can resist the temptation to stay out of his own pictures. Sometimes they play a hit, but usually they're just extras in mob scenes. That's what Cecil B. DeMille did in "The Crusades"; he put on a helmet and breastplate and whooped it up with the other extras. He was in one of the train sequences of "Union Pacific," too. Tay Garnett was recognized by his friends who looked quickly at a man who leaned against a wall in "Trade Winds."

Henry Koster played a scene in one of his pictures so that his mother, in Prague, could see him. William Wyler held a glass of punch during the party sequence in "Jezebel," and will be seen in "Wuthering Heights," in the costume of a Yorkshire squire, just walking into the scene and walking off again.

Dolores Costello is doing very well indeed in her journey up the comeback trail. Before "The King of the Turf" was finished word got around that she was giving a grand performance as the feminine lead, opposite Adolphe Menjou. Offers began to pour in from other studios. The week after the picture was finished she signed up for "Outside These Walls."

Now it's Warner Brothers who have joined the movement to keep the movie stars off the air. Humphrey Bogart was refused permission to appear on Kate Smith's program recently; Twentieth Century-Fox is said to be trying to dissuade Alice Faye from doing eight shows a year for radio, and to get Don Ameche to drop that Sunday night program of which he has been a feature for so long.

It's reported that Darryl Zanuck, of Twentieth Century-Fox, started all this when he heard the first broadcast of "The Circle."

A GOOD spring tonic for any woman's wardrobe is a daytime dress in a fresh spring print. This season even the most modest shopping budget can take care of this need without difficulty for stores throughout the country are showing a tempting array of frocks in a bewildering variety of intriguing prints, and at pin-money prices.

Utility dresses that are equally at home on resort boardwalks, country club terraces, smart shopping avenues or your own home and garden path are designed in both tailored spectator types and softly styled dressmaker models that afford ample range of choice for all tastes and figures. These glorified budget frocks not only have style and quality and charming looks to recommend them but they are modernized to the nth degree with such practical virtues as built-in dress shields made without rubber so that they go along with the frock safely and repeatedly into the tub, or to the dry cleaner. Their styling takes into account the factor of making the dresses easy to iron, a detail appreciated and sought for by every woman who buys carefully.

Youth Reflected In Spring Styles

The short skirts that swirl and flare at their widened hemlines carry a "little girl" air about them that makes you feel sure that Dame Fashion surely must have partaken of the fountain of youth. The program of dress planned looks just that way. Of course if you are not of the type to wear school-girlish clothes then you can find models that bring fullness to the front in unpressed pleats.

Speaking of fullness, you see the new movement toward fullness and drapes reflected in coats with full blouse tops and full wristlength sleeves. The new lingerie blouses have long bishop sleeves a la Gibson girl.

Swish of Taffeta Welcomes Spring

Taffeta is a favorite silk this spring. The biggest "swish" taffeta is making is in the cunning "little girl" petticoats that every move of the new stylish swing skirts will be making when the pageantry of spring fashions takes place. The taffetas employed range from monotones in any of the new high colors to candy-striped or polka dot effects.

Taffeta for the daytime dress, too, if you please and very smart street suits tailored of taffeta are shown. For your bouffant party dress choose taffeta and flounce it in tiers if you wish to follow the last word in fashion.

Mesh Effects Are Smart

The idea of mesh effects in gloves, in hosiery in the voguish new snoods, also in wide sashes to girdle about the waist in gypsy fashion is evidenced throughout the current style program.

65 Years Ago Occurred the Death Of "The President Nobody Knows"

Encyclopedias and Dictionaries of Biography Give Little Space to Millard Fillmore Yet He Was One of the Most Interesting Characters Who Ever Occupied the White House and Many Important Measures Were Passed During His Administration.

© Western Newspaper Union.

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

"THE President Nobody Knows!"

That title could be given, and not inappropriately, to an American who died 65 years ago this month. He was Millard Fillmore, 13th President of the United States, but he has been the subject of fewer biographies and less space is devoted to him in the encyclopedias and dictionaries of biography than has been the case with any other of our Chief Executives. So the average American knows very little, if anything, about him as a man or as a President.

Yet he was one of the most interesting characters who ever occupied the White House and during his Presidency occurred several events of oustanding importance in American history.

Fillmore was born in a log cabin on a farm in Cayuga county, New York, a few miles southeast of the little city of Moravia, on February 7, 1800. Opportunities for an education were limited in the primitive schools which existed in that region and which young Fillmore attended less than three months of each year. There were no newspapers or magazines available and his father's "library" consisted of only two books—the Bible and a collection of hymns. In fact, it is said that young Fillmore never saw a history of the United States nor a map of his country until he was 19 years old!

When Fillmore was 15, he was apprenticed to a wool carder and clothier and with his first wages purchased a small English dictionary which he studied while attending the carding machine. By the time he was 19 he had resolved to become a lawyer. His term of apprenticeship had two more years to run but he made an arrangement with his employer whereby he agreed to relinquish his wages for the last year's services and also promised to pay $30 for his time.

Next he made an arrangement with Judge Wood of Moravia, a retired country lawyer, by which he was to receive his board in payment for working in the office. He began "reading law" under the judge's direction, and, to supplement his income, he taught school a part of the time. By 1823 he had learned enough law to be admitted as an attorney by the court of common pleas of Erie county, even though he had not completed the course of study usually required. The influence of several leading Buffalo lawyers, whose confidence he had won, was mainly responsible for that.

Fillmore's father was then living in Aurora and he went there to begin practice. He won his first case and for doing so was rewarded with a fee of $4! But more important than that to his future career was an event which took place in 1826.

During his term as an apprentice, he had met and fallen in love with a young schoolteacher named Abigail Powers. They became engaged before Fillmore moved to Erie county but he was so poor that for three years he could not afford to travel the 150 miles to see her. In February, 1826, he journeyed at last to Moravia and they were married in the home of her brother, Judge Powers. Then Fillmore took his bride back to the home he had built for her with his own hands and they began their struggle to live on the meager earnings of the young lawyer.

To help her husband continue his studies, Abigail Fillmore went back to school teaching. In 1827 Fillmore was admitted to the bar as a full-fledged attorney-at-law and the next year he was elected to the state legislature. At that time the anti-Mason excitement was at its height and Fillmore was sent to Albany as the representative from Erie county of that wing of the Whig party. In 1829 he was granted the right to plead before the state Supreme court and the next year he was re-elected to the legislature.

Fillmore distinguished himself by drafting the bill, passed in 1831, which abolished imprisonment for debt in New York. The next year he was elected to congress and after serving one term, retired until 1836, when he was re-elected. He was again returned to Washington in 1838 and 1840 but declined a renomination in 1842.

In 1847 he was elected comptroller of the state of New York and in his annual report for 1848 suggested the establishment of a national bank, with the stocks of the United States as the sole basis upon which to issue its currency. Out of this suggestion grew eventually our present system of national banks. During this same year Fillmore again entered the arena of national politics. Conspicuous for his anti-slavery views, he was chosen by the Whigs as their candidate for vice president and running mate for Gen. Zachary Taylor in the campaign of 1848.

By virtue of his election to that office Fillmore presided over the United States senate during the heated debate in the session of 1849-50 over the slavery question. Angered by the bitter language used by the senators, Fillmore made a forcible speech announcing his determination to maintain order and declaring that he would rescind the rule, established by Vice President Calhoun in 1826, which deprived the vice president of authority to call senators to order. Instead of resenting this encroachment upon their procedure by an executive order, the senators cheered Fillmore at the conclusion of his speech and directed that his remarks be entered in full on the pages of the senate journal.

Fillmore presided with equal firmness during the exciting debate over Henry Clay's "omnibus bill" which dragged on for weeks. Then the controversy ended abruptly when President Taylor died on July 9, 1850, and Millard Fillmore left the senate to take up his new duties as President at the other end of Pennsylvania avenue. In accordance with his wishes, the severest simplicity marked his inauguration.

Fillmore faced one of the most difficult tasks ever undertaken by a President. Already the United States was a "house divided against itself" over the issue of slavery and his conciliatory policies won him the condemnation of both sides and the wholehearted approval of neither... Due to the fact that his party was in the minority in both houses of congress, many wise measures which he recommended failed to pass. However, the United States is indebted to him for cheap postage, for the extension of the national capitol, the cornerstone of which he laid on July 4, 1851; and for extension of contemporary knowledge of the West through various exploring expeditions which he authorized.

Even more notable than domestic affairs were the international relations developed during the Fillmore administration. He sent Perry on the famous expedition which opened the ports of Japan to the world and established diplomatic relations with that country. Carrying out a strict policy of non-intervention in the affairs of foreign nations, he used stern measures to suppress filibustering expeditions to the Latin American countries and with equal firmness exacted from other countries respect for our flag.

But so unpopular did he make himself with the anti-slavery element in the North by his signing the bill which admitted California, thus virtually abrogating the Missouri Compromise, and more especially by his signing the Fugitive Slave law and his attempts to have it enforced, that the Whigs denied him a renomination in 1852.

During all his career as a statesman in Washington, his "right hand" had been his wife, who has been described as "perhaps the most remarkable of the wives of our Presidents" and "the wings by which her husband soared so high." Finding the White House destitute of books when she became the "First Lady of the Land," Mrs. Fillmore prevailed upon her husband to obtain an appropriation from congress for a library in the executive mansion. So the famous collection of books in the White House today is a perpetual memorial to Abigail Fillmore.

Mrs. Fillmore died soon after the inauguration of her husband's successor—on March 30, 1853. A year later their only daughter also died and in 1855 the lonely ex-President took a trip to England where he received numerous attentions from Queen Victoria and her cabinet ministers. Returning to the United States the next year he became a "third party candidate" for the Presidency when he was nominated by the American or "Know Nothing" party. In the election he received the electoral vote of only one state, Maryland, and after that retired from public life to his law practice in Buffalo.

In 1858 he married again, this time a widow, Mrs. Caroline C. McIntosh. As the first citizen of Buffalo, he was frequently called upon to welcome distinguished visitors to his city, including Abraham Lincoln when he was on his way to Washington in 1861 to become President. He helped establish the Buffalo Historical society and, although he took no active part in the Civil war, he gave his support to the cause of preserving the Union.

Fillmore died in Buffalo on March 8, 1874, and was buried in Forest Hill cemetery in that city. His fame somewhat eclipsed by that of another President whom Buffalo had given to the nation—Grover Cleveland—, it was not until recent years that its citizens honored him by erecting a statue of him within its boundaries.

But it is different in the little city of Moravia. It is prouder of the fact that it can call Millard Fillmore its own than of the fact that it was the childhood home of John D. Rockefeller. Old timers there will tell you the tradition of how the ambitious young lawyer, not yet 21, first attracted attention by his delivery of a Fourth of July oration which caused some of his hearers to prophesy that he "would make his mark and perhaps become a judge." Apparently, though, no one was so brash as to predict that he would become President of the United States!

They will show you the old-fashioned home on Smith street, marked by a tablet erected by the D. A. R., which tells you that "In this house the thirteenth President, Millard Fillmore, and Abigail Powers were married on February 5, 1826." And they will take you outside the town to a scenic spot which bears the name of Fillmore Glen, now a state park, where rushing streams that come tumbling down flower-studded, forest clad slopes and flow across green-carpeted meadows keep fresh the memory of Millard Fillmore. For in Cayuga county, at least, he is not the "President Nobody Knows"!

Falls in Fillmore Glen state park, near Moravia, N. Y.

A few years ago there came to light in the musty files of the state department at Washington a document which was an interesting echo of the foreign policy of President Fillmore. It was a letter which he sent in 1851 to Seyed Syeed Bin, sultan of Muscat, at Zanzibar in protest against the Sultan's closing the harbors of his country to American commerce. Written in the flowery style of the Orient, the letter pictured the United States with all the extravaganza of an Arabian Nights' Tale.

The letter opens with President Fillmore explaining that he is Chief Executive of the 31 United States of America, and enumerating each of the states. The message, the President says, he is sending by an officer of high rank in the United States navy, on the "steam ship Susquehanna, one of the many hundreds of ships belonging to this great nation, which now float over all seas, bearing to all nations offers of peace and good will and serving also as means of defense and national power."

Of the size of his country the President tells the Sultan:

"From the region of ice which bounds the United States on the north to the flowery land of the orange on the south is a journey of 100 days, and from the eastern shores, which receive the first beams of the rising sun, to those on the west, where rest his setting rays, is 150 days' journey, and this immense country is not a sandy waste, but filled with populous cities, traversed by mighty rivers and crowned with lofty mountains. By railroads or in steamboats the citizens of this immense country, pass from one place to another with inconceivable rapidity.

"From the seat of government at Washington I send my commands in a few minutes by the Lightning Telegraph, to all parts of the United States; and they are obeyed. I speak of these things not for the sake of boasting; but in the Spirit of Friendship and Peace, and that you may know that all parts of this country are open to you and your Ships and your people for the purposes of Commerce and Trade. I shall welcome in all our ports the Ships which bear your flag.

Having thus extended full hospitality to the Sultan's ships the President then chides his "Great and Good Friend" for not being so generous.

"How can you think to be just," the President writes, "that while we open so many hundred ports to you, you should wish to confine us to a single port, or prevent our ships from going to all parts of your dominions. Great and Good Friend, this cannot be. Free trade everywhere is desirable, for so can the various productions of different countries best be distributed throughout the world. I hope the traffic of our country with yours is mutually beneficial. I hope it will continue and increase."

"The flag of this country," he says, "was treated by you and your people with disrespect, therefore, Consul Charles Ward left your court. In this matter he acted rightly and I approve his course. He has shown me your letters in which you promise to listen to my wishes. If I send another Consul to Zanzibar, I expect that he shall be treated with equal honor as the consuls of other nations, and that the flag which he hoists, and which is his protection, shall have the same honors paid to it, as the flags of the most-favored nations. In these respects I ask for no superiority over other nations, on the part of United States, neither can I admit any inferiority."

With these business matters out of the way, the President returns again to pleasanter affairs. He commends and congratulates the Sultan on his enlightened suppression of the slave trade, elaborately extends his best wishes and promises to write him frequently. The letter ends thus:

"I have caused the great seal of these United States, the signal of truth and stamp of honor to be placed on this letter by the officer who is entrusted to hold it, and to use it on great and solemn occasions.

"Your good friend,

"MILLARD FILLMORE."

"By the President
Daniel Webster,
Secretary of State."

SAFETY TALKS

What Are You Going to Do?

IT DEPENDS on whether you're going to kill someone or just injure him.

If the automobile accident you may have next week is going to do a lethal job, the chances are your car will strike a pedestrian. On the other hand, if only non-fatal injuries are inflicted, it's an odds-on-bet that you'll bump smack into another motor vehicle.

National Safety Council statistics for 1937 show that when a traffic accident produces a fatality, the collision is between a car and a pedestrian in 39 per cent of the cases. Collisions between two motor vehicles produce 26 per cent of the fatalities with other types of collisions contributing smaller numbers to the total.

However, the Council says, it is collisions between two or more motor vehicles that produce the bulk of non-fatal injuries—53 per cent or 725,000 cases in 1937. Collisions between a motor vehicle and a pedestrian produce the next largest number of non-fatal injury cases—25 per cent or 335,000 cases.

In 1937 traffic accidents killed 15,400 pedestrians and 10,300 deaths occurred as the result of collisions between two or more motor vehicles.

Ink Spots And Spatters

By Jergie

The Ink Spots had a touch of the flu last week so this feature was conspicuous by its absence. At this writing most of the flu germs have departed from the Times force . . . so maybe something can be done about it.

Friday, March 17th is a great day among the Irish as it is St. Patrick's Day. There will not be a shortage of green ties in this community as Irishmen are scarce as hen's teeth. So it will not be a legal holiday around here. Legend tells us that St. Patrick drove all the snakes out of Ireland on that date many years ago. Might be a good idea to drive some of the "snakes" out of this country . . . spies, Communists, un-American societies and undesirable aliens of all classes.

Earl Hall continues to take a few healthy swings at Earl Miller. Here's one Earl published the other day: "Somehow there seems to be something appropriate in the news picture one day this week which showed Earl Miller wearing a dunce cap at a banquet in Des Moines." Ouch!

Lest we forget: Fishing season opens in Iowa on April 1st . . . no fooling . . . but it's on trout, and that means a trip to northeastern Iowa for the flyrod fan. This writer is tempted to try out the sport over there as we have heard that Iowa has some really fine trout streams in that section of the state know as "The Little Switzerland of America.

But, as soon as the ice goes out of the rivers and lakes the lowly Bullhead will furnish a lot of fun for early anglers. Our local "Bullhead Expert," Eck Zeidler is usually the first nimrod to bring home the first catch of the season Early Bullheads are mighty good eating . . . but we prefer the sport of fishing for the game variety of bass, pike, northerns and pan fish with rod and reel or the more sporty flyrod.

Keep your ear to the ground and perhaps soon you will hear the sound of the Legion Hall being constructed. At least we hope so. The proposed Hall will fill a genuine community need and everyone in this community should "kick in" his bit to help along.

I-S-A-S

Movie producers need a good bawling out. They produce some wonderful pictures and then spoil everything by trying to put over something they know nothing about. The other night we saw "The Arkansas Traveler," the story of which centered around a newspaper. The story was full of errors which stuck out like a sore thumb to those acquainted with newspaper work. It was amusing to see Bob Burns setting type by hand the way he held the "stick" and set the type, never once coming to the end of a line to justify it and to insert a lead or slug. Then he apparently set several paragraphs of matter on the linotype machine and during the whole process sent only one line through the machine And, in this day and age where can you find a print shop that has a job press run by foot power? And the general arrangement of the shop was terrible. We presume that where the movies show other industries that the errors are just as bold. The producer should at least hire the services of someone who knows how things are done in the shop where the story centers Every time we have attended a movie that showed scenes in a newspaper shop error after error shows up. This is probably true in other industry shown in the movies.

HATS—WHAT A NUISANCE!

Hats are just bother and nuisances. It is disgusting to go to a theater or performance of some kind and sit behind someone hidden from view by a large hat. It would be just as well to stay home as to pay to see the back of a hat.

About the only thing to do is to look around at other hats. Some of the styles remind us of the comic strip where a lady had an overshoe on her head and said to her companion, "Bet you wouldn t guess what I made it of." Others might as well be a cake pan. They would serve the same purpose.

These "doll" hats are just the thing. You can see over them (the smaller ones anyway) and they surely must be warm.

They say a woman isn't dressed up without a hat. Some of these new styles certainly attract attention. They are all right, but they take up too much space in public buildings.—Doris.

GARDEN WHEN GROUND'S FIT—NEVER MIND DATE

By planting seeds in early spring alert gardeners can steal a march on old man winter and their ambitious neighbors by being the first to have "before the season" green garden vegetables, asserts C. V. Holsinger, horticulturist at Iowa State College.

Cold-hardy plants can be sown in Iowa as early as March 20—just as soon as the garden can be worked into shape for planting, Holsinger has found.

Plant Beets, Carrots

Root crops as beets, radishes, carrots, parsnips and salsify can be planted just as soon as the ground warms up, he says. He recommends these varieties: Crosby's Egyptian, Detroit Dark Red and Ohio Canner beets.

Holsinger recommends Chantenay, Ox Heart, Danver's Half-long and Amsterdam Coreless as cold-resistant carrots.

Small round Alaska peas can be planted as early as April 1 without danger of being killed by an early frost.

Grand Rapids is the only early variety of lettuce Holsinger recommends.

Onions planted—either from seed or sets—are considered cold hardy Southport Globe, Yellow Prizetaker, Red Globe are dependable varieties.

Here's Onion Trick

Holsinger revealed a trick for growing "real early" spring onions He buys about 10 pounds of medium to small onions from his grocer and plants them as soon as the ground can be worked.

They can be pulled from 15 to 20 days earlier than those onions planted from the ordinary bulbs or from onion seed.

MINNESOTA ANGLER TO RECEIVE NON-RESIDENT LICENSE NUMBER ONE

V B Gillot of Wiels, Minnesota is slated to receive the number one non-resident fishing license for 1939 as soon as the licenses are available for distribution. Gillot, a retired railroad man, says he has held an Iowa non-resident fishing license ever since the licenses have been issued.

In addition, this ardent fisherman holds non-resident licenses in several neighboring states and spends the majority of his time in fishing. For the pursuit of his favorite sport he maintains two automobiles, a model T Ford and a larger machine. The exceedingly well cared for Model T is his favorite, especially for short trips in Minnesota and to the lakes of North Central Iowa.

A study by the National Association of Manufacturers shows that American workers receive far more in real wages than workers in countries ruled by dictators. The report stated: "A factory worker in the United States can buy four times as much food and clothing with an hour's wage as a German worker, nine times as much as an Italian worker and nearly 12 times as much as a Russian worker."

The Redoubtable Mme. La Compt

IN THE year 1734 a daughter was born to the La Flammes, a French family living at St. Joseph on Lake Michigan. While she was still a little girl, her parents moved to Mackinac and there she grew up and married her first husband, Pilette de Sainte Ange.

In 1765 Sainte Ange took his wife to the site of the future city of Chicago where they lived for several years. After a time she became familiar with the language of the Pottawatomies and other tribes, studying their character and acquiring a great influence over them.

When Sainte Ange died, his widow moved to the French village of Cahokia on the Mississippi. She soon married again, this time to a Canadian named La Compt. During the Revolution, the Cahokia villagers, whom George Rogers Clark had won to the American cause, were in constant danger of attack by the Indian allies of the British, as were the American settlers in the early days of the Territory of Illinois.

Many times Mme. La Compt was awakened in the dead of night by Indian friends who urged her to seek safety in St. Louis. But, instead of fleeing, Mme. La Compt invariably set out alone to meet the hostiles and dissuade them from their purpose. Sometimes she stayed with them for days before she succeeded. More than once the fearful villagers of Cahokia, armed and ready for an attack, saw a strange procession coming out of the woods—a band of warriors with their war-paint freshly washed away and humbly obeying the orders given them by the tall white woman marching ahead of them!

After rearing a large family of children, Mme. La Compt was widowed again. Again she was married, this time to an American named Tom Brady. She outlived him for 30 years and died in Cahokia in 1843 at the age of 109 years.

A Monument to Failure

LONG'S PEAK, the highest in Colorado, is not only a memorial to its first American discoverer, Maj. Stephen H. Long, of the Engineers Corps of the United States army, but it is also a monument to a great failure.

In 1819 the United States government was preparing to send a great army into the Upper Missouri country to establish a military post to protect and extend the fur trade. The expedition was also expected to add to the scientific knowledge of the West and Major Long was directed to take with him a group of scientists for this purpose.

With a small and inadequately supplied force, he crossed the plains to the base of the Rockies and spent some time exploring that region.

When he returned he made a report that was destined to become famous for its inaccuracies. "In regard to this extensive section of the country," he wrote, "we do not hesitate in giving our opinion that it is almost wholly unfit for cultivation, and of course uninhabitable by a people depending upon agriculture for their subsistence."

More than any other man, perhaps, he was responsible for fixing upon the maps of the United States of that time the words "The Great American Desert" and those words retarded development of that country for nearly half a century.

Sharpshooter and Spy

VIRGINIA MOON of Memphis, Tenn., was 16 years old and going to school in Ohio when the Civil war broke out. She immediately asked for passage through the Union lines to Tennessee and was refused. So, when the Union flag was first raised on the school grounds, she shot every star out of it, one by one.

The results were immediate and most favorable—she was expelled from school and sent home to Memphis, which was just exactly what she wanted.

She was not only a good marksworman—she was pretty and self-confident. Her beauty and other charms enabled her to become engaged to 16 young Confederate army recruits, all at the same time. This wasn't very honest, she admitted years later, but it made the young soldiers feel good and didn't make her feel bad.

As the war went on, Gen. Sterling Price appointed her special agent and she carried dispatches and other information back and forth from Union to Confederate territory. Several times she was arrested by Northern soldiers, being acquitted on one occasion but found guilty and served short sentences on others.

She was the only Confederate woman spy whose unusual career did not end with the war or with spying. At the age of 75 she became a movie actress in Hollywood. She appeared with Pola Negri and Mary Miles Minter and other prominent stars before her death in Greenwich Village at the age of 81.

PETER EXHORTS TO CHRISTIAN LIVING

LESSON TEXT—I Peter 3:8-18.
GOLDEN TEXT—But as he which hath called you is holy, so be ye holy in all manner of conversation.—I Peter 1:15.

Christians are not only "the called of Jesus Christ," but are also "called saints" (Rom. 1:6, 7). Peter had the same thing in mind when he (in v. 9 of our lesson) says that we "are thereunto called." Let us remember that when we are tempted to say that we "do not profess to be saints." "Dr. James Denney once remarked how odd it would look to see in the New Testament the statement, 'I don't pretend to be a saint.' It would be tantamount to saying, 'I do not take the call of God very seriously and I do not profess to live up to it.' When God calls, our answer is not a matter of indifference and . . . not a matter of presumption. 'It is not a life for which we volunteer, or on which we adventure of our own motion, or which we have to carry through our own resources; it is a life for which we have a divine summons, and that summons is our justification'" (Arnold's Commentary). All believers are called to live a consistent, powerful, useful Christian life, and God makes such a life possible.

I. Living for Christ (vv. 8-12).

To live for Christ one must be born again into the position of a true believer. Peter was not so foolish as to urge that his readers try to live a Christian life without first being born into the family of God. He therefore lays a foundation for his exhortations by discussing in the early chapters of his epistle the atonement of Christ and the position of the believer. Then he gives specific instructions to certain groups, leading up to the general plea for Christian life and testimony.

1. Among brethren (v. 8). Knowing what Christ has done for us, it might well be assumed that all of us who are His followers would love one another and do nothing but that which would promote Christian fellowship. But human nature prevails even in the Church, and sometimes displays its worst side there. Hence we need to consider this instruction of Peter that we cultivate unity, sympathy, and love among the brethren. Observe that this is not just a pious platitude which we may take or leave. It states our obligation to one another as Christians. Whatever others may do or say, let us be clear that we have obeyed this word of God.

2. With unbelievers (vv. 9-11). God has called us to live peaceably with all men. We will not cure evil by returning for it more evil. If our ungodly neighbors or fellow workers mistreat us by word or deed, we are not to retaliate in kind. We are to control our tongues —how much we need to learn that lesson. We are not to be tricky and deceitful, not to look for a fight, but to seek peace.

3. For our own good (v. 12). What blessed assurance we find here for the believer. The eyes of the Lord are upon both the good and the evil in the world. He knows. Consider also the promise of "blessing" in verse 9, of seeing "good days" in verse 10, the assurance of peace in verse 11. It is not only honoring to God, but good for us to live as Christians.

II. Suffering for Christ (vv. 13-18).

Peter was writing to those who were bearing bitter persecution because they followed Christ. Perhaps some were tempted to say then as they do now, "If there really is a God, if Christianity amounts to anything at all, certainly believers would not be permitted to suffer at the hands of enemies of Christ." Let us be clear that being a Christian in no way exempts us from the common experiences of humanity, nor does it assure us that we will not have to bear persecution and suffering. But (and here is a point of greatest importance), we are able to meet such difficulties in the name of Christ without fear or discouragement, for God is with us.

1. Not afraid (vv. 13, 14). The martyr spirit has not died out in the earth, and there are those in our day who stand unafraid before dictators and rulers who would destroy them because of their loyalty to Christ. "Be not afraid."

2. Not discouraged (vv. 15-17). The one who knows God's Word (and every Christian ought to know it) can give answer (v. 15) concerning his faith. Note that if we are punished for our own wrongdoing we may well be depressed, but if we meet persecution with a clear conscience (v. 16) we need feel no discouragement.

3. Not alone (v. 18). The path may be dark and difficult, but one thing we know, our Leader, Christ walked an even darker and more desolate road. He it is who is now with us, yes, in us. Remember that "Christ also hath once suffered" (v. 18) and go on your way in victory.

C. Houston Goudiss Recommends Generous Use of Eggs; Shows How This Protective Food Helps to Balance the Diet

By C. HOUSTON GOUDISS

ANY experienced homemaker knows the many cookery uses of eggs. Indeed, she is likely to feel that she could not keep house without this indispensable ingredient, which a French chef once described as "the cement that holds the castles of cookery together." It is true that we should have to do without some of our most delectable dishes if eggs were not available to use as thickening, leavening, coating, binder, clarifier, stabilizer or garnish. But even more significant than their contribution to good cooking are their splendid nutritional values.

A Notable Protective Food

Eggs rank next to milk in that group of mineral—and vitamin-rich foods that we call "protective." They contain substances that are very efficient for growth and development. And in the opinion of nutritionists, they are more nearly interchangeable with milk than any other food.

Eggs are among the first foods to be added to the milk diet of infants. And homemakers who desire to give their families well-balanced meals should provide an egg daily for every individual.

This requirement can be reduced, if necessary, to four eggs weekly. But luckily, as we head toward spring, eggs become more plentiful, and lower in price. And it is usually possible for every family to obtain a full quota of this splendid food . . . so rich in the elements that help to build muscle, bone and blood.

A Fine Body Builder

Eggs contain proteins of high quality, and their proteins seem to be particularly well adapted to building body tissue. That is one reason why this food is so desirable in the child's diet . . . so useful in constructing the diet for adults who need "building up." It also makes eggs a logical choice as a main dish for Lenten meals.

It's interesting to note that the proteins of the white and yolk of an egg are quite different in their properties. Egg white is almost pure protein and water, while the protein of the yolk is composed of a different assortment of amino acids, or building stones.

The yolk also contains fat . . . in a finely emulsified form, so that like milk fat, it is comparatively easy to digest. And it is the yolk which is highly prized for its rich store of minerals and vitamins. It is therefore considered the most important part of the egg for young children, and the white is often withheld and only the grated yolk given.

Rich in Iron and Phosphorus

Eggs are notable as a source of iron and phosphorus. Iron is necessary for the formation of the hemoglobin or red pigment of the blood, and the iron in eggs is valuable for this purpose. Phosphorus is the mineral that pairs with calcium in building teeth and bones. It also plays an important part in regulating the neutrality of the blood. The phosphorus in eggs occurs in a form that is particularly well adapted to the needs of the growing body.

Four Important Vitamins

As our knowledge of vitamins has increased, nutritionists have urged that eggs be accorded a wider place in the diet, for they supply four of these vital factors—vitamins A, B, D and G. They are an important source of vitamin A, which promotes growth and helps build resistance to disease. The appetite-promoting vitamin B occurs in lesser amounts than A, but its presence helps to increase the quantity of this essential substance included in the daily diet.

Eggs are one of the few foods naturally containing vitamin D, sometimes called the sunshine vitamin. And it has been determined that they are rich in vitamin G, which is required for health and vitality at all ages.

Raw Eggs vs. Cooked

Eggs are one of the foods that digest most satisfactorily, about 97 to 98 per cent of their protein being digested and absorbed. Moreover, the thoroughness of digestion does not seem to be affected by the method of cooking, and a hard-cooked egg, when well masticated, is as completely digested as one that is soft-cooked. Raw egg white on the other hand is not as completely utilized as when slightly cooked. This shows the fallacy of the old-fashioned idea that raw eggs were more desirable for invalids than cooked eggs.

Brown Eggs vs. White

Some people have an idea that the color of the shell has a bearing upon the nutritive value of an egg. In certain parts of the country, homemakers will pay a premium for eggs with white shells. In other sections, brown eggs are in greater demand, and therefore sell at a higher price. There is no justification for attaching any importance to the color of the shell.

Avoid "Same Old Thing"

Occasionally homemakers tell me that some member of their family doesn't like eggs. It is true that some people have an allergy to eggs, that is, they cannot eat them without having some abnormal reaction. But more often, any antipathy to eggs is due to the fact that they have been served in the same way, day in and day out. There is no excuse for that, for eggs are so versatile that they may be served in dozens of different ways, and in some dishes, their identity can be entirely concealed.

"Sunny side up" may be the most popular method of preparing eggs. But don't get into a menu rut, whether you are serving them for breakfast, dinner, lunch or supper. Cook them soft. Cook them hard. Transform them into omelets and souffles. Scramble them, plain, or dressed up with cheese, diced bacon, frizzled dried beef or sausages.

Eggs for Lenten Meal

As a main dish for a Lenten meal, hard-cooked eggs may be creamed and served alone, or combined with cooked vegetables or fresh or canned fish. Use them as a binder in croquettes and loaf mixtures, as a coating for deep-fried foods.

Since eggs admirably supplement the food values of milk, puddings made from milk and eggs are an ideal dessert for children, and help to balance the diet of adults. Custard pies, fruit whips and cakes are also delightful dishes that bring to the diet the protective values of eggs.

HURTS OATS MORE THAN BARLEY IF SOWN LATE

"A bushel a day is taken away —" this is the penalty for each acre of oats sown late, tests at the Iowa Agricultural Experiment Station show

"If the oats can't be sown early, the smartest thing to do is to sow barley," says L. C. Burnett. "While most barley varieties are also affected adversely by late sowing, the effect is not so great as for oats."

Over a period of 4 years, 10 oat varieties at Ames showed an average loss in yield of 11.76 bushels per acre due to 11 days delay in sowing (middle of April instead of the first) .Nine varieties of barley over a 5-year period showed a reduction of only 3.23 bushels per acre for 12 days delay in sowing. Velvet and Glabron did not show any decrease by delaying the seeding until the middle of April. Delay beyond that date, however, resulted in increasingly heavy losses. Of the common oat varieties, Gopher showed the least loss from late seeding.

GET BEST RESULTS PLANTING CORN, SOYBEANS SEPARATELY

Planting soybeans with corn that is to be hogged-down or put into a silo is not recognized as a profitable practice by experienced livestockmen, reports C. C. Culbertson, animal husbandman at Iowa State College.

When planted together neither the corn nor soybeans grow as well as when each is planted alone.

Culbertson says that when tests at the experiment station were made soybeans reduced corn yields as much as 5 bushels an acre in a year of ample rainfall.

When saybeans are planted to furnish a home-grown protein supplement Culbertson says the best practice is to plant a strip of beans along one side of the field that is to be hogged-down.

Economic Crisis in Germany Forces 'Now or Never' Choice

By Joseph W. La Bine

EDITOR'S NOTE—When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of the news analyst, and not necessarily of the newspaper.

Germany

In 1939 economic poverty can throttle the most warlike nation, because modern conflict needs manpower far less than gunpowder, airplanes and battleships. Moreover, foreign trade has become a vital weapon of diplomacy. When Adolf Hitler first reached power he could import and use the raw materials of war by capitalizing on his inheritance from democratic government. Commodities, a huge reserve of unused capital, equipment and unemployed labor helped build the Third Reich's military machine. Other millions went for costly public works to impress the world with Germany's prowess. Meanwhile heavy imports cut the Reich's foreign exchange to a reported 800,000,000 marks by January 1 this year, while Germany's moral stock fell on the world market thanks to Jewish persecution and the Czech crisis. Barter trade (swapping) was a desperate and unpopular recourse to combat the more orthodox type of agreement like America's reciprocal program.

Among typical German signs-of-the-times:

(1) Twenty-nine per cent of the national income goes to the state via taxes; 10 per cent more reach the Reich's coffers via social insurance and enforced donations. Of the basic 29 per cent, 25 goes for rearmament.

(2) Total tax revenue for this fiscal year (excluding Austria and Sudetenland) will be $8,880,000,000; miscellaneous income, $80,000,000; income via long and short term borrowing, $4,800,000,000; the rough total income, $14,000,000,000. Today's public debt stands at between 21 and 24 billions, far larger in proportion than the bemoaned U. S. public debt.

(3) Minus cash, the Reich has paid armament makers $400,000,000 in I. O. U.'s since November 1. Bearing no interest, half of them have gone back to banks as collateral for loans. Result: A completely artificial credit structure which could collapse overnight.

Chief worrier about this impossible situation has been Dr. Rudolf Brinkman, successor as Reichsbank president to Dr. Hjalmar Schacht. On the job a few weeks, Dr. Brinkman worried himself into a nervous breakdown. Meanwhile developments reveal that Dr. Schacht was not kicked out of the Reichsbank into disfavor, but to tackle the job Adolf Hitler had in mind when he told the Reichstag January 30 that Germany "must export or die." A financial wizard who has more friends abroad than any other influential Nazi, Dr. Schacht is now in charge of a campaign to revive foreign trade by (1) seeking new markets to provide additional foreign exchange, and (2) thawing out frozen debits and credits created under the Nazi system.

The significance of this situation is that France and Britain, now weaker than Germany in military might, will eventually be stronger by virtue of superior financial reserves. Without batting an eyelash, London is spending more than $3,000,000,000 for defense next year and can continue at this pace for several years to come. Germany must get foreign exchange immediately or stop rearming, and Britain is now waging an aggressive and successful campaign to block the Reich's trade expansion plans.

One very important reason why observers predict a European showdown this spring is that the Reich must strike now—while her might is still supreme—or suffer eventual diplomatic defeat. Moreover this economic supremacy of world democracies will have the same effect on dictatorial Italy and Japan.

Congress

Most Americans do not realize that the bulk of New Deal reform measures have been adopted in one form or another. But practically everyone realizes the cost of reform has been tremendous, that the public debt now stands at $40,000,000,000, that the treasury has a current deficit of $2,200,000,000. With reform achieved, President Roosevelt is willing to join conservatives in two mutually desired ambitions, balancing the budget and helping business get back on its feet.

Chief arguments concern the method. New Dealers, whose program is voiced by Secretary of Commerce Harry Hopkins, would remove oppressive taxes and hope that the resultant boom would swell federal coffers, balancing the budget without eliminating "necessary" activities. Most businessmen and many congressmen would take an additional step—economy.

Total 1939-40 budget estimates are $8,995,000,000, creating a new $3,326,000,000 deficit and zooming the public debt smack against its legal debt limit of $45,000,000,000—unless congress raises the limit. Far from willing to raise it, or even to approve the new budget, congressional Republicans have found strong support in rebellious Democrats. Their spokesman is Mississippi's Sen. Pat Harrison, who came out for a flat 10 per cent budget cut and a warning: "The country's credit is good and I don't think we have reached the debt danger point, but the stop-look-and-listen sign is up . . . A lot of this emergency stuff could be cut, and I'm in favor of cutting."

Senator Harrison has already found support in two studies:

Brookings. Surveying the new governmental reorganization bill (to consolidate and abolish executive agencies for the sake of economy and efficiency), Washington's thorough-searching Brookings institution claimed it was ill-conceived, that no economies would result. Of 132 agencies listed for reorganization, only 54 require legislative authority, and no legislation is necessary unless congress wants to "give the President authority to make laws by executive order." Suggestions: (1) Prune all present activities "rigorously;" (2) develop a "more consistent" program.

National Economy League. Reason for this survey was that "before lasting recovery and increased employment can be a reality . . . all doubts about national credit must be removed. The plan: Reduce next year's deficit from $3,000,000,000 to $500,000,000. Comparative budgets (000,000 omitted):

| Expenditure | President's Budget | League Budget | Saving |
|---|---|---|---|
| Relief | $2,040 | $1,400 | $640 |
| Public works | 1,131 | 700 | 431 |
| Social security | 928 | 928 | . . |
| AAA | 694 | 500 | 194 |
| Defense | 1,320 | 1,320 | . |
| Interest | 1,050 | 1,025 | 25 |
| Veterans | 539 | 539 | . . |
| All other | 1,293 | 675 | 418 |
| Total | $8,995 | $7,287 | $1,708 |
| Receipts | 5,669 | *6,142 | .... |
| Net deficit | 3,326 | 1,145 | .... |

*Assumes business improvement from pared budget.

So potent are economy's new friends that the administration may well find its cautious business-wooing program a boomerang. Wading half way across the pond of conciliation when opinion favored a complete passage, Mr. Roosevelt has been left behind and confronted with charges of insincerity because Harry Hopkins—the man who started his program—would need business' support to win the 1940 nomination.

Headliners

MARSHAL HENRI PETAIN

The "hero of Verdun" emerges from retirement to serve France in another crisis. Now 82, Marshal Henri Petain has been named ambassador to newly reorganized Insurgent Spain in an obvious gesture to win Gen. Francisco Franco's friendship by emotional appeal. Many years ago, as instructor in the French war college, Marshal Petain instructed Spain's new iron man, himself a famous Twentieth century militarist. Later, in 1925-26, Marshal Petain joined forces with Franco in leading the expedition that defeated Abd El Krim, Riff leader in Morocco. Petain also went to Madrid and negotiated an agreement with the governor of Premier Prima de Rivera.

India

Vast India is at once Great Britain's most precious and troublesome colony, partly because Indians lack the ability to rule themselves, partly because a few native leaders realize Britain gets much more from the provinces than she returns. Mohandas K. Gandhi has been the leading native agitator, winning a shallow victory when the home rule constitution established 600 native sovereigns who have absolute power over their subjects but must bow to the 11 provincial governors. Working hopefully, Gandhi's party congress now holds a meaningless majority in eight provinces.

Fasting is Leader Gandhi's favorite means of forcing reforms. Since September of 1932 he has tried it six times, most recently in the native state of Rajkot. Reason: The 29-year-old Thakore of Rajkot promised last December to grant new powers to his subjects, but had not fulfilled the promise. After four days of fasting the aged Gandhi was weakening fast and the Indian viceroy expected to intervene.

But the fast held food for thought in Britain, already busy with enough troubles. For the first time Gandhi's party had enough strength to precipitate major trouble throughout the state, had the marquess failed to intervene. Even if the current outbreak of nationalism is settled, Gandhi's followers will obviously gain strength.

Religion

As Eugenio Cardinal Pacelli, Pope Pius XII was Vatican secretary of state and an important mediator in many a European squabble. His two most notable achievements were (1) leadership in the World war settlement attempt of Pope Benedict XV and (2) consummation of the concordat that brought peace between the Vatican and Italy. His most difficult job was negotiating a treaty with Protestant Russia in 1929, a feat that won him the red cap of cardinal when Pietro Gasparri retired in 1929.

When Pope Pius XI died last February 9, Secretary of State Pacelli immediately became camerlengo, interim chief of the Roman Catholic church until the college of cardinals could name a successor. Internationally better known than any other potential candidate, Cardinal Pacelli's name was immediately bandied about as the most likely successor. This, despite his confessed longing to lead the contemplative life of a monk, despite rumors that his selection would be none too welcome by totalitarian Germany and Italy.

If Cardinal Pacelli had never admitted anti-dictator sentiments, Italian Foreign Minister Count Ciano's newspaper, Il Telegrafo, lost no time pointing out that a Pacelli appointment would be unwelcome in Rome. In Germany another newspaper, Das Schwarze Korps, chimed in. At the Vatican, German Ambassador Carl-Ludwig Diego von Bergen told the college that his nation was "assisting at the elaboration of a new world," and that "the papacy without doubt has an essential role."

Though conceivably unrelated to these events, Cardinal Pacelli's elevation to the papacy might be in direct retaliation against two governments which saw fit to interfere with church affairs. A further possibility is that the Rome-Berlin axis erred diplomatically to such an extent that the college of cardinals felt obliged to appoint an experienced statesman who could deal with Herr Hitler and Signor Mussolini.

Spain

The spectre of two simultaneous Spanish civil wars is unique, but not unexpected. Since Barcelona fell and President Manuel Azana resigned upon breaking with Premier Juan Negrin, Loyalists have been threatened by internal dissention. On the defensive more than ever before, conservatives sought desperately to regain the Anglo-French favor that was shifting to victorious General Franco and his Insurgents, meanwhile making sincere gestures to end the war. Premier Negrin and the Communist element, fearing the consequences of surrender, promised a futile "fight to the death" which would serve no purpose since a Franco victory was inevitable. In the long-awaited explosion conservative Loyalists seized the government, drove Negrin from power and paved the way for peace.

'Pegleg' Smith

FOR an example of chilled steel nerve, consider the case of Thomas L. Smith. He and his partner, Jim Cockrell, were trapping in the Green river country of Wyoming in the 1820s when Smith fell over a cliff and broke his leg. It was not an ordinary fracture. The bone was shattered and a piece of it protruded through the flesh. Prompt action was necessary to prevent blood poisoning.

"Guess we'll have to cut 'er off, Jim," said Tom Smith, calmly.

Their only instruments were a three-cornered file and their hunting knives. Cockrell used the file to make a saw of Smith's knife. Then Smith took his partner's knife, cut through the flesh, tied up the arteries, sawed the bone, seared it with a red-hot iron and sewed up the stump.

When the wounded leg healed, Smith made a wooden leg for himself and thereafter he was known as "Pegleg" Smith. Before the accident he had been a famous horseman. Now there was all the more reason for going mounted and the wooden leg apparently made little difference in his horsemanship.

At any rate he became the most successful horse thief on a large scale in the history of the West. He spent most of his time organizing expeditions into California to rob the Spaniards. He and the famous Jim Beckwourth made one foray into the land of the dons that netted them 3,000 head of horses!

But when California came under the Stars and Stripes it changed the habits of "Pegleg." "I won't never steal from my fellow-Americans" he declared virtuously. Temperance, however, was not among his newly acquired virtues. He ended his days, a victim of strong drink, in San Francisco in 1866.

A Perilous Journey

CAPT. RANDOLPH B. MARCY halted with his party of 40 soldiers and 25 mountain men at the junction of the Uncompahgre and Gunnison rivers on his way to Fort Union, N. M., in 1857. "Me no guide you over San Juan mountains in winter time," declared the old Ute Indian chief.

Capt Marcy had orders to join the forces of Col. Albert Sidney Johnston near Salt Lake City with animals and supplies. The orders said to proceed without delay so there was nothing for Captain Marcy to do except proceed. In spite of the Indian warning that none of the men would get through Cochetopa pass alive, the party left December 11 for Fort Massachusetts near the present Fort Garland.

Four days later, when they reached the mountains, winter's fiercest storms were raging. Snow swirled and beat against their faces. It piled in deep drifts and hung heavily on the legs of animals and men. The cold became intense.

Captain Marcy's detachment pushed on, although animals fell dead in their tracks and men had to abandon equipment. Before they reached even the summit of the pass their rations were exhausted and they had to eat the flesh of the mules as the animals died.

On January 12 couriers from a relief party arrived and announced that help was close at hand. Shortly thereafter aid came. So starved were the men that Captain Marcy issued strict warnings to eat sparingly.

His orders evidently were only partly obeyed as one man died from overeating—the only fatality in one of the most trying adventures of American history.

The Scholar-Builder

IN 1798 Gabriel Richard, a French priest, arrived in Detroit, whose muddy streets were lined with log huts and shacks housing its 1,200 inhabitants. But most shocking of all to Pere Richard, who had been a teacher in France, was the utter lack of educational opportunities for the children of the village.

With what funds he had, he founded private schools and began a campaign to establish public schools. Music was lacking, so he gave the people their first organ, brought piece by piece on pack horses almost 1,000 miles through the wilderness. He succeeded in getting Detroit its first public library.

He made a journey to Washington to get federal funds for other projects and brought a printing press with him when he returned. With it he established the first newspaper in Michigan.

In the election of 1823, Pere Richard was chosen delegate to congress from the Michigan territory which included all of Wisconsin and Iowa, part of Minnesota and a small strip of Ohio.

When the Asiatic cholera swept the city in 1832, Pere Richard visited the sick and dying without thought of himself. He died September 12, the last victim of the epidemic, and leaving behind him many monuments of accomplishment.

IT'S an ill censor that blows no picture some good. Warner Brothers' "Yes, My Darling Daughter" is the latest picture to profit by censorship. And anyone who saw the play of the same name on which the picture was based is likely to suspect that the movie moguls who were responsible for the film rather hoped that a little censorship, though a dangerous thing, might result in plenty of free publicity.

New York's state censor board obligingly banned the picture. Whereupon the department of education's board of regents even more obligingly lifted the ban, and the public rushed to the theater where the picture was finally shown, eager to see what all the fuss was about.

In fact, so much interest was stirred up in this darling daughter that the theatrical producer who produced the original play is said to be considering reviving it.

A Giant of American Commerce Celebrates Its 100th Birthday

In March, 1839, William F. Harnden Began Carrying Packages in a Large Leather Bag and That Marked the Beginning of the Express Business Which Now Employs 57,000 Men Who Cover More Than 275,000 Miles of Railroad, Motor, Air and Water Routes.

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

A HUNDRED years ago the ailing son of a New England widow had an idea for a new business. Equipped only with a large leather bag, which he carried in his hand as he traveled by train and steamboat, he started his enterprise.

Today that business has 23,000 offices, uses 10,500 vehicles in its operation and employs 57,000 men who cover 213,000 miles of railroads, 20,000 miles of water routes, 33,000 miles of air lanes and 10,500 miles of motor roads.

The young man who started all of this was William F. Harnden and his new enterprise was the express business.

Harnden was born in Reading, Mass., August 23, 1813, the son of a poor man who was unable to give him little, if any education. While very young he entered the furniture factory of his cousin, Sylvester Harnden, and there learned the trade of cabinet-making. Then his father died and young Harnden was called upon to support his widowed mother.

In 1834 he entered the employ of the Boston and Worcester railroad as a conductor and was in charge of the first passenger train run in New England. Later he became a passenger clerk and ticket master for the same railroad but after five years in railroad work was so exhausted by the long hours—16 hours a day—that he gave up his job and went to New York for a visit.

There he met a transplanted Bostonian, James W. Hale, agent for a Providence-New York steamboat and operator of a reading room and news service. Hale told Harnden that he had frequent requests for some one to do errands in Boston and suggested that a service of this sort offered opportunities for profitable work if some enterprising young, fellow would organize it. Impressed with the idea Harnden made a contract for express service with the superintendent of the Boston and Providence railroad and the manager of the John W. Richmond, a steamer plying between Providence and New York. Then he advertised in a Boston newspaper on February 23, 1839, that he would run an "express car from Boston to New York and vice-versa four times a week."

As a matter of fact, this "car" was the large leather bag which he obtained and his none-too-strong back and hands to transport it. But the public didn't know that, and by March, 1839, he had enough packages to start operations.

A Successful Venture.

The venture was such a success that Harnden acted as his own messenger only a few months. Then he had to have assistance. He established a clerk in an office on Wall street in New York since brokers' remittances and messages soon formed an important part of his business. Next he established an office in Boston, took his brother, Adolphus, into his employ to act as messenger between the two centers, and the second year opened an agency in Philadelphia.

When the steamship business of the Cunard company between Boston and Liverpool greatly stimulated the express business, its success suggested to him the extension of his service overseas. So in 1840 he formed a partnership with Dexter Brigham Jr., his New York agent, under the name of Harnden and Company.

That same year was marked by a personal tragedy in Harnden's life. When Commodore Vanderbilt's steamer, the Lexington, caught fire and burned in Long Island sound on January 13, 1840, Adolphus Harnden was one of the victims. When his body was washed ashore, 148 letters were found in the pouch he was carrying and were dried out and mailed. The $40,000 in money and other valuables he was carrying were lost, however. One of New England's important financial institutions owned $12,000 of the lost funds but, fearing to ruin Harnden's business, never pressed its claim.

The extension of Harnden's business into Europe changed the character of it somewhat. When offices were first established in the principal cities of England and France and later in Ireland, Scotland and Germany, their principal business was handling emigrant funds between Europe and America. But soon they were handling the emigrants themselves. Planning to expand his business in America by helping people secure the undeveloped lands in the West, he carried on an active campaign for immigration into the United States, using large red posters to proclaim the resources and opportunities in America.

To aid the company's traffic in "human express," Harnden secured special rates and privileges on the Enoch Train line between Liverpool and Boston and also the exclusive use of certain boat lines on the Erie canal. It is estimated that more than 100,000 emigrants were billed through from their European homes to new homes in the Middle West.

The inevitable result of Harnden's success with his new venture was to bring competitors into the field. One of these was Alvin Adams, an orphan boy from Vermont who came to Boston at the age of sixteen to make his fortune. He sought it in vain for 20 years—as a hotel clerk, family grocer and produce merchant. Then in 1840 he joined with P. B.

WILLIAM F. HARNDEN

Burke to form Burke and Company to compete with Harnden and Company.

Boston, however, looked upon Harnden as the originator of express service and gave him most of its business. Burke soon became discouraged and retired from the firm. But Adams, the alert, aggressive Yankee, was convinced that he could make good and persisted.

By 1843 Harnden and Company's European ventures had led them to neglect their American business and Adams quickly turned this fact to his own advantage. At first Adams and Company (formerly Burke and Company) had confined its operations to New York, Connecticut and Massachusetts. When Harnden sold his Philadelphia branch to Hatch and Bartlett, Adams expanded his southward to Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington and during the next decade began covering the South along the Atlantic and Gulf coasts.

Harnden died on January 14, 1845, after a five-year struggle with tuberculosis and the two parts of his company's business, the domestic and the European branch, were separated and sold. Eventually the American domestic business dropped his name and became known as Thompson, Livingstone and Company. This company, which changed its personnel and name several times, began extending its operations westward and southward until it came into competition with Adams and Company.

The European branch of the Harnden company kept its name until 1851 when unwise investments resulted in its ruin. Then the name of the founder vanished from the express business, although his son, William H. Harnden, was for a short time an employee of one of the new companies that came into existence—Wells-Fargo and Company. Eleven years after Harnden's death a memorial was set up over his grave in Mount Auburn cemetery near Cambridge, Mass., bearing the inscription "Erected by the Express Companies of the United States in the Year A. D. 1866." Thus they paid tribute to the "father of the express business" but, aside from this, little public recognition has ever been given the pioneer in this giant of American commerce.

Meanwhile the Adams company had been reaching westward as well as southward and eventually reached California via Panama. The territory which it now controlled was the most densely populated and most developed industrially of any in the United States. Consequently its business expanded enormously and by the early fifties Adams and Company was the best entrenched express company in its territory.

In July, 1854, it was able to buy out its principal rivals, including the former Harnden company, and it was reorganized under the name of the Adams Express company with a capital of $1,200,000. The express business had come a long way in the 15 years since young William F. Harnden had started it with his one leather bag!

Competition Begins.

Successful and powerful as the Adams Express company was, this did not prevent new competitors coming into the field. Many confined their operations to the limits of their own city and the collection and delivery of small merchandise in it. Others had agents or connections in several towns or cities while still others served all the principal trade centers in one state or in several states along a particular trade route.

By 1860 five companies were the acknowledged leaders in the business—Adams, the American, the National, the United States and Wells-Fargo and Company. Because Adams was so well entrenched on the north and south routes along the Atlantic and Gulf coasts the other companies were forced to seek new territory.

The part played by the express companies during the period of westward expansion, both before and after the war, is too well known to need much mention here. Included in that epic is the story of the famous "Pony Express" and many a thrilling yarn of adventure with hostile Indians and highwaymen while the stage coach lines were in operation.

Along with the development of our railroad system came a development of the operations of the express companies until July, 1918, when the seven large express companies were consolidated as a wartime measure under the name of the American Railway Express company. After the war, the unified company was permitted to continue as a private enterprise. On March 1, 1929, the company was taken over by the railroads and renamed the Railway Express agency.

Then came the air express division of Railway Express. An agreement was later signed in July, 1934, with Pan-American Airways for international express, and the first shipment under the new system left Oakland, Calif., for Latin America on August 7, 1934. The next great boost for air express came on February 1, 1936, when 22 of the nation's major airlines joined.

WILLIAM G. FARGO

Famous in the annals of the West is the name of Wells-Fargo. The men who made it thus were Henry Wells, born in New Hampshire December 12, 1805, and William George Fargo, born in New York May 20, 1818. Wells got his start in the express business as an agent for William F. Harnden and in 1841 formed a partnership with George Pomeroy to operate an express business between Albany and Buffalo.

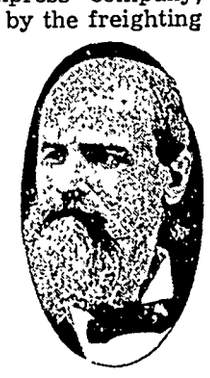
The venture was not a success and suspended operations for a time. Then it was resumed with the assistance of Crawford Livingston under the name of Pomeroy and Company's Albany and Buffalo Express. In 1842 William G. Fargo became a messenger for this company and that marked the beginning of the association of the two men which was destined to make both of them famous. After a number of reorganizations and consolidations of the various express companies then in existence, Wells-Fargo and Company emerged in 1852 to operate between New York and San Francisco, carrying gold and silver out of the West and taking supplies into the gold regions.

Since there were no railroads then in that part of the West, Wells-Fargo carried their valuable parcels on stagecoaches and these treasure coaches soon became the prey of highwaymen who inaugurated the "stagecoach hold-up" which has become such a familiar Wild West tradition.

In 1857 the United States government asked for proposals from the express companies to transport the mails across the continent and Wells-Fargo organized the Overland Mail company which carried mail, express matter and passengers by stage from St. Louis, through New Mexico and Arizona to Los Angeles and San Francisco. Then came the discovery of gold in Colorado. From the Missouri river 2,000 miles westward to California was a stretch of almost unknown wilderness without a single permanent settlement except the newly founded Mormon colony in Utah and a few posts established by the United States army. But where gold was, men, supplies and news must go.

W. H. Russell

So a stage line, called the Central Overland, California and Pikes Peak Express company, was established by the freighting company of Russell, Majors and Waddell to operate between St. Joseph, Mo., and Denver, Colo. At that time there was a mail route from Sacramento to Salt Lake City operated by Ben Holladay, and another between Sacramento and Salt Lake, run at infrequent intervals by John Hockaday. Both of these enterprises were absorbed by the new express company which, under the leadership of W. H. Russell, conceived the daring idea of establishing a regular fast mail route over the entire 2,000 miles between St. Joseph and California. Thus was the famous "Pony Express" born.



Ben Holladay

When the Overland Telegraph company was completed in 1862, the usefulness of the Pony Express was at an end. Meanwhile its success and the threat of war had caused Wells-Fargo to transfer its Overland Mail company from the southern route to the central route. So Wells-Fargo bought up three stage lines between Salt Lake City and Sacramento, and consolidated them all into one. From 1866 to 1869 it continued to run a stagecoach mail, express and passenger service from St. Joseph to Sacramento despite the perils of blizzard and hostile Indians.

When the Union Pacific railroad and the Central Pacific met at Promontory Point, Utah, in 1869 to form a transcontinental railroad, Wells-Fargo sold out its stagecoach business and reverted to its former role of express and banking company and in 1870 became the dominant express company in all the western territory.

MAYBE he picked up the habit about the time he couldn't resist pulling the pig-tails of the girl who sat ahead of him in grammar school. But even though they were more chivalrous in their school days, adult man (and woman) has a lot of trouble keeping his hands and fingers out of mischief.

The National Safety council reports that of all accidents suffered during 1937 by persons who were at work, 33 per cent were hand and finger cases. Legs and feet were injured in 24 per cent of the occupational accident cases. The human trunk was injured in 19 per cent, or the third largest number of cases.

Other parts of the body and the frequency with which they were injured: arms, 11 per cent; head (other than eyes), 6 per cent; eyes, 2 per cent. The council said general accidents accounted for 5 per cent of the cases.

Klemme takes a special interest in Earl Hall's "The Day's Bouquet," published in the Globe-Gazette Friday Here it is:

"To THE REV WILLIAM GALBRETH—for his magnificent job of "being a friend of man." To literally hundreds of Boy Scouts, past and present, he is affectionately known as "Pop." To these and the thousands who have known him in his ministerial capacity in Mason City, Plymouth, Rock Falls, St Ansgar and one or two other North Iowa points, he is regarded as an unsurpassed example of Christian living—aided enormously by a helpmeet peculiarly qualified for the tasks which have come her way as a minister's wife."

To which we might add that the Klemme schools were indeed fortunate to have two of Rev. and Mrs. Galbreth's children as instructors in our schools For several years Miss Agnes Galbreth was principal of the high school. Later W. Henry Galbreth was chosen by the school board as Superintendent, which position he now holds here. Klemme adds a big "Amen" to Editor Hall's comment.

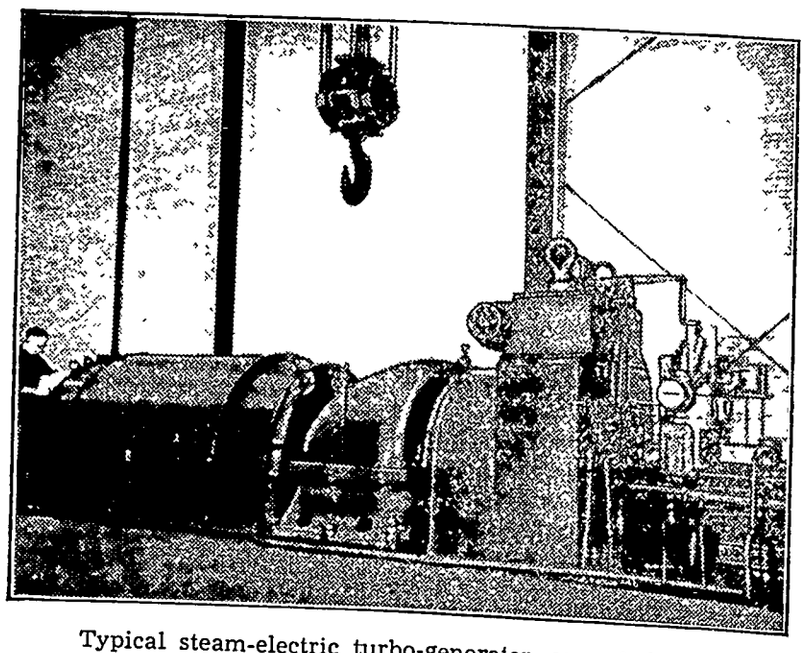
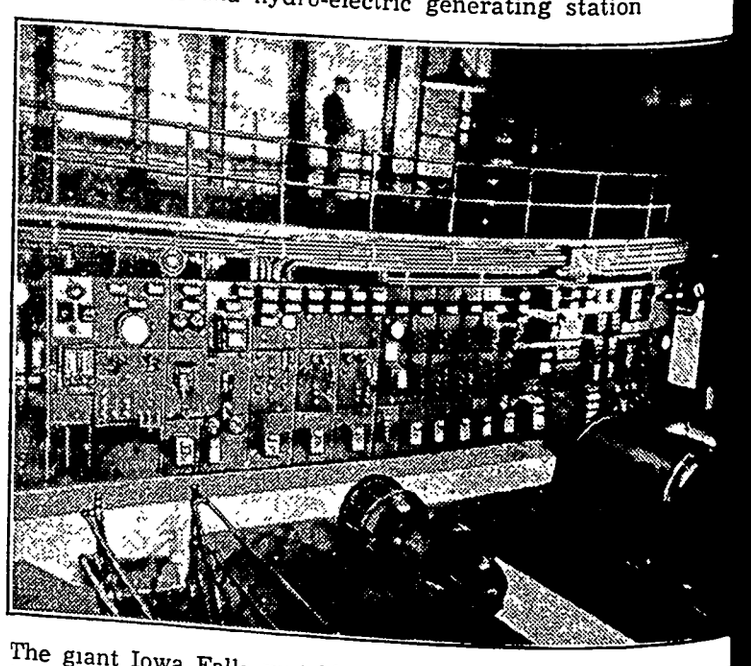
The Iowa Falls steam-electric and hydro-electric generating station

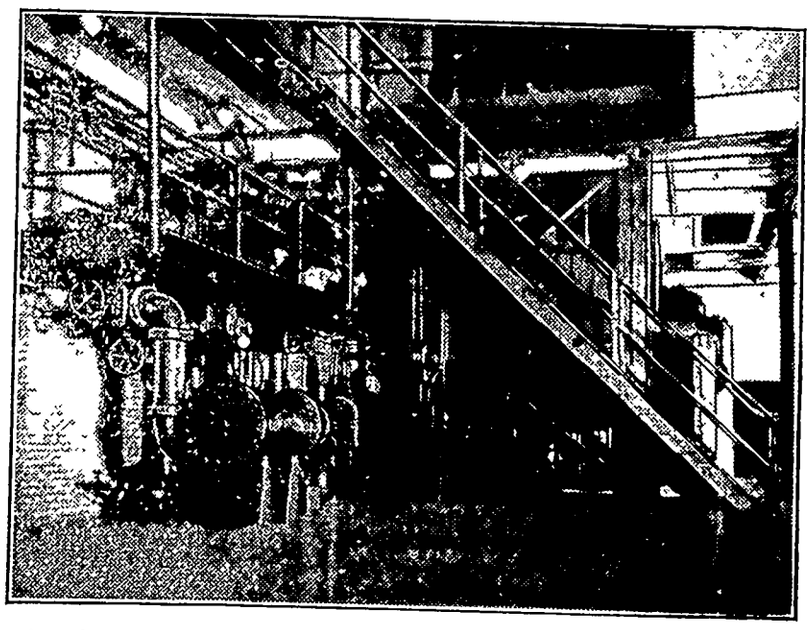
This is the first of a series of advertisements depicting the physical property of the Company and concerns the steam-electric generating station located at Iowa Falls, Iowa. Originally constructed in 1914 with an installed capacity of 1500 KVA, this station has grown until today it has a capacity of 5875 KVA plus another 1000 KVA in hydro-electric generators. Coal transformed into steam is used to operate steam turbines which in turn drive electric generators to furnish electrical energy to the station bus at 2300 volts.



Typical steam-electric turbo-generator, one of three in the Iowa Falls plant.



The giant Iowa Falls switchboard — the nerve center of the system — all apparatus and machinery are controlled from this point



Auxiliary equipment — condenser, pumps and heaters — for turbo-generator.

From the station bus the electricity is carried through heavy cables to the substation where it is stepped up to 33,000 volts and sent out over many miles of transmission lines to more than one hundred cities and towns. At these locations individual substations step the voltage down for delivery to the local distribution system networks and over these networks and through distribution transformers the electrical energy is delivered to you—the customer. The generation of the Iowa Falls plant is, of course, augmented by that of several other plants in other locations and in times of storm trouble or other difficulty, interconnecting transmission lines with other companies are often brought into service in order that your supply of electricity may be uninterupted and continuous.

RED BOOK

David K Brown, state printer, is making rapid progress in the preparation of The Iowa Official Register, the widely used "Red Book" This pocket size encyclopedia of Iowa governmental history has in the past contained many pages of statistical information dating back to territorial days. Mr Brown proposes to drop these dry tables of figures in favor of more pertinent and modern outlines of governmental and economic development Pages 389 to 469 will be lifted bodily from the 1937 38 Red Book These are solid pages of tabular matter costly to set in type and of questionable value in the current issue since it is information easily obtainable from former issues In place of this material will go feature articles about former President Herbert Hoover the state fair, The American Legion the WPA and PWA in Iowa Iowa In The World War, Tama Indian Reservation. Iowa Cabinet Members, schools and universities and many other new subjects Mr Brown expects to have 20.000 copies of the Red Book ready for distribution by August 1

OFFICIAL CAR No 1

Because its predecessor was too willing to snap the rubber off its official bank roll, the State Executive Council found it necessary last week to notify all offices and departments under its jurisdiction that strict economy in the purchase of office supplies and equipment would be necessary during the remaining months of the fiscal year The order specified that purchases "must be confined to absolute necessities." When the present council took office the $260,000 appropriation and a $70,000 transfer from the general fund had been mowed down with careless abandon. Discussion of the situation revealed, also, why Governor Wilson has been so anxious to retire as many state owned automobiles as possible Among the items paid for out of Executive Council funds was $1,600 upkeep on state car No 1, the luxurious limousine driven by former Governor Kraschel and retired to pasture immediately by Governor Wilson as soon as he took office.

$1 PENSIONS

There are 41 old age pensioners in the state who draw monthly checks of $1 This fact has been the subject of rather bitter complaint by recipients and their friends and by others who view such payment as combined insult and injury. According to Byron G Allen Superintendent of the Old Age Assistace Division, these $1 payments represent nothing more than a legal recognition of the applicant's claim and should not be construed as finel disposition of the case Often an applicant will apply for assistance in anticipation of the age or financial condition which makes him eligible. A case in point is the janitor of a country school who was notified in February that his services would terminate the following June. He applied immediately for a pension and after investigation it was approved Yet he could not be legally paid the full amount until the income from his school job actually stopped The $1 payment simply keeps him in position for full participation when he comes entitled to it without further examination and investigation.

PENSION TURN-OVER

About 1,000 new pension applications are approved by the Division each month, 700 of which actually reach the pension rolls. At the moment the average monthly payment is $19.82 and because of the increase in approvals this amount will decrease—very slowly—unless the legislature or some other source makes additional funds available. The net gain each month is about 350 pensioners. About 100 withdraw from the rolls voluntarily. Death removes approximately 360 every month while another 125 are removed for cause. The legislature is not in the mood to increase taxes or develop additional funds for this purpose except by plugging known leaks in sources of funds pledged to old age assistance This, it appears, may bring sizeable amounts into position for pension use.

OFFICE BUILDING

A series of conferences between committees from the House and Senate and Governor Wilson are expected to produce something definite in the way of a new state office building plan during this session of the legislature. Plans have progressed to the point that a tentative plan has been prepared for outlining a U or E shaped building on property near the State House now owned by the State. In the meantime leases on downtown offic buildings and other remote locations calling for annual rentals of about $130,000 are being scanned cautiously. Financing methods are being studied and while neither the committee nor the Governor has made public any announcement, it is rumored a solution without new income is near.

Don't Gamble On "Cheap" Oil and Tires

It is often a temptation for the motorist to "save" money by buying a cheaper grade of oil for his car. CHEAP OIL is usually EXPENSIVE at any price . . . it may mean costly repair jobs directly due to poor lubrication.

YOU DON'T GAMBLE ON PENNFIELD MOTOR OIL . . . .

Pennfield Motor Oil costs a few cents more per quart . . . but you are assured of getting the very best oil obtainable. It's worth all you pay and . . . you can gamble on that.

THERE'S NO DOUBT ABOUT FIRESTONE TIRES & TUBES . . . .

Again you play safe when you have us put a new set of FIRESTONE Tires and Tubes on your car or truck. All sizes and several grades to choose from . . . and all are money saving values.

You can bet that you get more miles per gallon when you fill up with White Rose Gas . . . .

PETER INTERPRETS CHRIST'S SUFFERINGS AND DEATH

LESSON TEXT—I Peter 1:17-23; 2:20-25.
GOLDEN TEXT—For Christ also hath once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God, being put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the Spirit.—I Peter 3:18.

A witness is one who knows by personal experience about that concerning which he testifies. Certainly no one could speak with more propriety or assurance concerning the sufferings and death of Christ than Peter. As one of the inner circle, he, with James and John, was with Jesus on almost every important occasion. He was on the Mount of Transfiguration, and with the Lord in the garden of Gethsemane. He witnessed His trial and in all probability His crucifixion. He was first at the empty tomb. Furthermore, he could speak as one who had in a moment of weakness denied the Lord and who had come by way of doubt and despair back to his faith in the Saviour. It is not only appropriate that we should study Peter's words on this subject but it is also the greatest possible theme with which to close our three-month study of the life and work of Peter. For all that he was and all that he did, can be explained only by his faith in a redeeming Christ.

I. Christ—the Saviour (I Pet. 1:17-23).

It is highly important that we meet the flood of smoothly phrased recognition of our Christ as the Master which at the same time denies Him as dying Redeemer. Hence we stress

1. A redemption by blood (vv. 17-20). This is a subject that all those who know God and "call on him as Father" (v. 17) approach in that reverential attitude which we call the "fear of God," which is not a cringing fear but a loving reverence. In that spirit we should proclaim that apart from the shedding of Christ's blood there can be no remission of sin. Money and other material things can only purchase other material and corruptible things. Our redemption could be bought only by the precious blood of the sinless, divine, and eternal Son of God, Jesus Christ (vv. 19, 20).

2. A life of faith (vv. 21-23). The faith and hope of the Christian are "in God." We do not trust in the arm of flesh. Our assurance is not in man or his devices. The gathering of riches, the increase of armaments, the acquisition of new territory by fair means or foul—let foolish men who know not God rejoice in such assurances of safety, but our faith is in God.

This life of faith is not an inactive thing, a settling back into a comfortable but effortless appreciation of God's great gift. It leads to obedience to the truth; fervent, unfeigned love of the brethren; purity of life (v. 22). Being born again means living in newness of life in Christ.

II. Christ—the Example (I Pet. 2:20-25).

Christ is not our example in the sense that we are to attain to eternal life and joy by an imitation of His life. That would be manifestly impossible, for we would have to begin where He began—He was without sin. But we "all have sinned and come short of the glory of God." We need a Saviour, not an example, as far as redemption is concerned. Having been saved by faith in His blood, we are ready to look upon Him as our example.

1. Our suffering (vv. 20, 21). One of the serious problems of life is suffering, and as we suggested last week, being a Christian does not grant us any immunity. If we suffer because of our own sin, we must expect to bear the result patiently; but even above that, when we find ourselves suffering for well-doing, we are to glorify God by bearing it patiently for Christ's sake. Nothing is a stronger testimony for Christ than a true Christian spirit in time of trial and sorrow.

2. The suffering of Christ (vv. 21-25). Our minds turn to Isaiah 53 and Psalm 22, as well as to the Gospel narratives, as we think of our Lord's suffering. As we read the words, "Christ . . suffered for you," we join the saintly expositor of the Word who fell upon his face sobbing, "For me, for me, He bore it all for me." How can anyone reject Him? How can you, unsaved reader of these lines, any longer turn this loving Saviour away?

These are trying days for the souls of men. In many parts of the world Christians are tasting the bitter cup of persecution. The day may come when we must meet the same fate, and even now we know what it means to bear the scorn of unbelievers. Shall we become fearful or embittered in our hearts? No, "consider him that endured such contradiction of sinners against himself, lest ye be wearied and faint in your minds. Ye have not yet resisted unto blood, striving against sin" (Heb. 12:3, 4). But He did! Wonderful Saviour!

WHAT to EAT and WHY

C. Houston Goudiss Reveals Several Reasons Why Food Sometimes Disagrees; Warns Against Eating When Tired or Worried

By C. HOUSTON GOUDISS

A GREAT many people have the unfortunate habit of warning friends and acquaintances against this or that food, on the ground that it is "difficult to digest," or "is almost sure to cause digestive distress, especially if eaten at the wrong time of day or in combination with the wrong foods." Indeed, to hear some men and women recount the various dishes that are best left alone, is to wonder how they manage to find anything to eat at all, in view of the many good foods they consider taboo!

Certainly there is no objection to food as the topic of conversation. It is so basic to good health that it should be uppermost in the mind of every individual who desires to promote physical and mental efficiency. And it is also natural for a person to be guided by past experience in determining what he should eat, and what it may be advisable for him to avoid

But it is a grave mistake for one person to warn another against any food or combination of foods on the ground that it will cause digestive distress. For the truth of the matter is that under proper conditions, a normal, healthy person should have no difficulty in digesting almost any food that has a place in the well-balanced diet.

Food Dislikes Often Unfounded

I once met a woman who told me that her contented-looking husband could, and did, eat most everything 'cept horseshoes. Menu planning was simple for her! And how different from the problems of the home-maker who must try to reconcile her menus, both with the food dislikes of various members of the family, and with the foods that they declare they can't eat, for fear of digestive distress.

It is true, of course, that individuals differ greatly, and occasionally a food that can and should be eaten regularly by most people, will cause distress in an individual case. But that is no indication that the food will have the same effect on another person, and it is misleading either to proffer or accept advice of this nature from friends.

It may be that the victim has an allergy to the food in question—that he reacts to it differently than the majority of people. But there is also the possibility that the prejudice exists because of some previous distress, caused, not by the food itself, but by the circumstances under which it was eaten.

Perhaps a clearer understanding of some of the mental and physiological factors influencing digestion would dispel many of the bugaboos that cause people to avoid various, wholesome foods and food combinations, and to warn others against them.

Scientists have established that the stomach is capable of reacting to almost every emotion and sensation that is experienced by men and women. Thus, how you eat becomes quite as important as what you eat. And any food or combination of foods consumed when you are tired, worried or angry, may cause acute distress, whereas the same food, when eaten at another time, may be digested without the slightest disturbance.

This indicates the folly of jumping to the conclusion that you can't eat this or that, and shows that one is scarcely justified in warning friends or relatives to avoid certain articles of diet.

There is a large amount of evidence that fear, anger or anxiety have the effect of diminishing the gastric secretions, and further, of arresting or slowing down the movement of the intestines.

If food is eaten under these conditions, it may remain stagnant in the alimentary canal, with the subsequent formation of gases and decomposition products. But instead of recognizing the true cause of the trouble, many people erroneously blame the food itself!

Medical men have frequently noticed that people often develop gastric disturbances when they suffer financial reverses, and continue to suffer from them until their financial condition improves—a striking demonstration of the importance of banishing fear and worry!

Never Eat When Tired

Almost any food may cause distress when one is suffering from fatigue. So it is unwise to sit down to a large meal when exhausted from too much physical or mental work. A brief rest before eating will put the body in much better shape to receive and assimilate the food.

Then, if the meal is served in pleasant surroundings, and if the food is flavorful and well cooked, the chances are that it will be digested satisfactorily by all normal individuals.

Be Tranquil at Mealtimes

In view of the fact that tranquillity of mind is essential to the proper utilization of food, homemakers should remember never to discuss unpleasant subjects at meal times. Don't nag the children about eating, or choose that time to discuss their lapses from discipline. Don't talk about finances or take up real or fancied grievances with your husband. Let such matters wait until the meal has been digested.

If these suggestions were more generally followed, it is almost certain that we would hear much less conversation about foods that cause distress, much more wholesome talk about the pleasures of the table.

"DEAR MRS. SPEARS: I had been wanting some really handsome velvet roses to pep up an evening dress. I was thrilled to find in your Book 2, instructions for making them from materials I already had.

"I thought you might be interested in a luncheon set I have just finished. It was planned to go with a set of blue dishes. There are four mats and a long runner in medium blue linen with bands of old fashioned needle weaving in darker blue across the ends. Just two edges of the napkins are banded with the weaving."

You who have pink dishes might like to try the same idea in tones of rose. Use a rather coarse linen. Prepare the work for the weaving by drawing out the fabric threads as for hemstitching. Each step is shown here in the diagram. Either linen or mercerized embroidery thread may be used.

Flowers for a Purpose

GARDENERS want flowers for house bouquets, for beautification of the yard, or both. To be certain of an abundance of flowers for cutting throughout the growing months, however, the gardener need plant packets of only three or four of the following flowers:

Annuals—snapdragon, aster, calendula, calliopsis, candytuft, carnation, bachelor button, cosmos, dahlia, larkspur, annual lupin, marigold, nasturtium, salpiglossis and zinnia.

Perennials—columbine, coreopsis, gaillardia grandiflora, perennial lupin, pyrethrum (painted daisy) shasta daisy and delphinium.

For earliest bloom, the following are recommended by Gilbert Bentley, flower expert: Calliopsis and candytuft among the annuals, and coreopsis, delphinium and pyrethrum among the perennials.

For late-blooming cut flowers, grow zinnia, marigold, gaillardia, snapdragon, aster, cosmos and dahlia.

Choosing or Doing

There is always something to do if we are willing to do it, and do not insist on doing something else. Many think there is nothing for them to do because they are more eager to choose their work than to do it. There is a share of life for everyone; there is work for every hand.

To Check Constipation Get at Its Cause!

If constipation has you down so you feel heavy, tired and dopey, it's time you did something about it. And something more than just taking a physic! You should get at the cause of the trouble.

If you eat the super-refined food most people eat, the chances are the difficulty is simple—you don't get enough "bulk." And "bulk" doesn't mean heavy food. It's a kind of food that isn't consumed in the body, but leaves a soft "bulky" mass in the intestines.

If this common form of constipation is your trouble, eat Kellogg's All-Bran for breakfast every day and drink plenty of water. All-Bran isn't a medicine—it's a crunchy, toasted, nutritious cereal. And it will help you not only to get regular but to keep regular, day after day. Made by Kellogg's in Battle Creek. Sold by every grocer.

3 ROLLS RIGHT! It's so easy to get the "hang" of rollin' 'em if you use P. A. The picture can't show how quickly Wood twirls up his "makin's," but it's only a matter of seconds. "And speakin' of taste," he says, "well, Prince Albert has more taste—more smoke-joy—and no bite."

4 READY? GO! Look at that smile on George Wood's face as he lights up his mellow-smoking "makin's" cig rette. "Show me a man with a P. A. tin peeking out of his pocket," he says, "and I'll show you a real contented smoker who's enjoying a smooth 'makin's' cigarette."

A joint musical program with Kanawha was held Sunday afternoon at the schoolhouse. The program was much the same as the one given at Kanawha a few weeks ago in which Klemme participated. Students from the Kanawha school furnished the vocal music A large crowd attended from both towns.

The typing class has started a new project this week. We are trying to do some stenciling work Marie, Margie, Elsie T., and Elsie W are typing "The Midget Shamrock" for Miss Merritt. Arlene and LeRoy are working on some things for Miss Brakel. Marian is working on some programs that are to be used for Sunday afternoon's program.

PLAY SAFE—DRIVE SAFE

The first hour Thursday was given completely to safety Sergeant Reese from Mason City and Patrolman Krieger of New Hampton, also on the force at Mason City gave very interesting talks on "How To Prevent Highway Hazards."

They answered any questions that anyone had and told us how to go about getting a driver's license, as well as school permits.

Mr. Reese said that in the last four years, the patrolmen have helped to cut the fatalities. To cut the death rate still more, each individual must be more careful as a pedestrian, as well as the driver of a vehicle.

The state of Iowa is experimenting on putting aluminum around corners to let the people know when they come to a curve.

GRADES 1 & 2 & KINDERGARTEN

The second graders finished their bird booklets this week

We are studying about Holland All of the interesting things we learn are printed in a big book called "Our Holland Book." One corner of our room is going to look like Holland. We are making a windmill and many other things.

Merlin, Richard T. and Willis finished reading their books and have new ones They read stories to us on Friday before we put their other books away.

Isabelle has been absent this week.

GRADES 3 & 4

On Friday, during our language period, we wrote stories about the raccoon that we saw.

Mrs. Stille showed us how her weaving loom worked last Friday when we were there. It was very interesting and we learned many things about weaving that we did not know.

Elizabeth Goll brought treats to school on Friday afternoon. Her birthday is March 18. She will be nine years old.

We each have new wash-up charts. Each time we wash our hands or face, take a bath or brush our teeth, we mark an "X" in a square. Every Monday morning for four weeks we shall bring the charts to school and receive a gold star if we have earned one.

McCORMICK-DEERING WIDE-TYPE DISK HARROW

Two sizes: 12 and 15-foot

It Folds to Fit Farm Gates

The new McCormick-Deering Wide-Type Disk Harrow brings you all the advantages of the regular wide harrow without any of the disadvantages It is built with heavy malleable iron hinges in the middle of each gang. To pass through a gate the operator makes a simple adjustment which permits the outer half of each gang to fold back behind the inner half. After passing through the gate the gangs are positively locked into their normal positions, ready for work.

The new wide-type disk harrow is built primarily for single disking. In this work the 12-foot harrow covers about 36 acres a day and the 15-foot harrow covers about 45 acres a day. When desired either size can be converted into a tandem harrow for special purposes.

A phone call or a postal card will bring you complete information promptly. Or stop in at the store and let us show you this new McCormick-Deering Disk Harrow in a size to meet your needs.

Kitchen Kinks

Dirty Clothes Line:-

After the winter weather the clothes lines are very dirty But just take Clorax or Hilax and put it on a cloth and clean the lines You have often used gasoline or kerosene, but vinegar is even bet- ter. Then take a cloth with nice clean soap suds and finish wiping the line Just try it

Polishing Faucets:-

Do your faucets in the kitchen or bath room ever get spotted? If so just take a clean rag with fur- ntiure polish on, and rub them good to polish them again They look just like new

Asbestos Flatiron Pad:-

A small sheet of asbestos makes an ideal rest for an electric iron as it is light and convenient to handle, is fireproof and a slow con- ductor of heat

Frozen Foods:-

Meat taken from cold storage lockers may be thawed in three ways· Let it stand at room temper- ature and then cook it promptly let it "defrost" in the refrigerator, or cook it without thawing The last method requires longer cook- ing time as do fresh vegetables and their nutritive value is equal The hard pack when not frozen in brine, may be placed in a small quantity of boiling water and cook- ed till tender This usually requires from 5 to 7 minutes after the wat- er boils again

Paper Towels:-

Have a roll of paper towels hanging in your kitchen They save many steps. Use them to wipe off the stove, in place of a kitchen rag, wipe out greasy skillets, drain bacon on, or wipe up anything spilled with them Sure save on washing hand towels.

SEVEN EAGLES CONFER- ENCE TROPHY ON DISPLAY AT WILSON DRUG STORE

The trophy is now on display at the Wilson Drug Store.

METHODIST YOUNG PEOPLE WILL GIVE EASTER PLAY

The Epworth League of the Methodist Church will present an Easter Play at the Liberty and Klemme Methodist Churches the week following Easter Sunday. A small charge of 10 and 15 cents will be made to pay for the rent of their cottage at Epworth League Institute in July.

The play will be given at the Liberty Church, Monday evening, April 10th, in the place of the reg- ular monthly birthday program. It will be presented in the Klemme Church, Friday evening April 14th, unless that date should seriously conflict with the District Music Contest. (Definite announcement next week.)

Work Progresses Rapidly On New School Building

GOOD WEATHER PAST WEEK AIDS WORK AT NEW SCHOOL

Ten Brick Layers Employed To Speed Up Work On Local Project

Substantial progress was made on the new school here during the past week by the general contract- or, Ernest Anderson, according to an announcement made by Public Works Administration Engineer, Voyle W. Wood. During this time, as many as ten skilled bricklayers were kept busy laying brick and tile on the walls of the gymnasi- um. It is estimated that the con- tractor will be ready to place the structural steel for the gymnasium roof by the first of April.

The contractor took full advan- tage of the warm weather of the past week by pouring the concrete for the stage floor and the tops for the furnace room, ash room, and the gymnasium vestibule. This concrete work has been greatly delayed on account of bad weather.

The electrical contractor, Garner Electrical Shop, also accomplished a great deal of work by roughing- in electrical conduit as the mason- ry and concrete work progressed.

Workmen started the first of the week to build forms for the rein- forced concrete slab on the second floor of the building. This slab will furnish fireproof protection between the ceiling of the first floor and the asphault tile floors on the second floor.

Mr. Wood also stated that Supt. W. H. Galbreth, H. F. Jost and oth- er school officials are to be con- gratulated for the active interest they are taking in the project. Such interest will further assure the community of a school build- ing which the people might well be proud of. That is to say, that when certain minor changes are needed in the details to best fit the needs of the school, the local offic- ials wil be in a better position to make decisions.

GENE MARKEY, the 20th Century-Fox producer, may have thought that Metro made a mistake when it abandoned "I Take This Woman" as Hedy LaMarr's second American-made picture. Certainly he liked the idea of taking that woman, to be his lawful wedded wife. Oddly enough, there's a strong resemblance between the new Mrs. Markey and the first one, Joan Bennett, as Joan appears in her brunette wig in "Trade Winds." And there'll probably be a resemblance in the setting of "Trade Winds" and the next picture in which Hedy LaMarr stars—"Lady of the Tropics," in which Robert Taylor will be her leading man.

This business of tracing resemblances can go on and on forever. Old timers can try to find one between the glamorous Hedy and that

SAUL BECOMES A NEW MAN

LESSON TEXT—Acts 9:1-12, 17-19.
GOLDEN TEXT—Therefore if any man be in Christ, he is a new creature: old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new.—II Corinthians 5:17.

The conversion of Saul is admittedly one of the outstanding events in Bible history. When two brilliant English lawyers, Lord Lyttleton and Sir Gilbert West, set out to disprove the truth of Christianity, they selected the ressurretion of Christ and the story of Paul's conversion as the focal points of their proof. Working independently, they then came together to compare notes and found that they had both become Christians since they had become convinced of the truth of the Scriptures.

The two events may well stand together as evidence for Christianity, for only on the ground of regeneration can the change in Saul be accounted for, and only on the assurance that he met the risen Christ on the Damascus Road can we account for his conversion. This is a great lesson, let us make the very most of it.

I. A Bold Persecutor (vv. 1, 2).

As our lesson opens we find the brilliant and zealous young Jew, Saul, "yet breathing out threatenings and slaughter against the disciples of the Lord." The persecutions in Jerusalem had practically wiped out the church in that city but had scattered the disciples abroad, and thus the witness had been spread. The death of the godly Stephen, to which Saul had given his approval, had only increased his determination to destroy those who were "of the way" of Jesus Looking for new fields to conquer, he carries with him to Damascus letters from the high priest at Jerusalem, giving him authority to imprison the followers of Christ. But on the way he meets Christ Himself, and is stricken to the earth.

II. A Convicted Sinner (vv. 3-9).

Stricken down by a brilliant heavenly light, he finds himself talking to the Lord Jesus. He hears from His holy lips the solemn indictment of those who persecute God's people—"Why persecutest thou me?" He who lays unkind hands, or untrue accusation upon God's children had best beware, for so closely is our Lord identified with His people that when they suffer, it is He who bears the hurt.

In a single sentence the Lord disposes of the persecuting zeal and the sinful skepticism of this proud young Pharisee, and Saul enters into Damascus not as the haughty persecutor, but as a man trembling and astonished at his own sin. He spends three days shut in with his own soul and God, not seeing, not caring to eat, losing all consciousness of earth, but entering into communion with God. By God's grace the old life is pulled up by the roots as it is displaced by the new life in Christ Jesus.

III. An Obedient Disciple (vv. 10-12).

Ananias was the "I am here, Lord" type of Christian to whom the Lord can confidently commit His important business. All we know of him is what is contained in this chapter, but it is a very beautiful and enviable record. God is able to work directly on any human soul and accomplish His end (as He did with Saul on the Damascus Road), but His usual manner of working is through faithful human agencies. One wonders how much would be accomplished for God if every Christian were as willing and ready as was Ananias to do the Lord's bidding in seeking out and helping a struggling soul. The greatest of all Christian leaders, the apostle Paul, was led out into his life of loyalty and service to Christ by a humble layman. Repeatedly God's Word by precept and example stresses the vital importance of personal work on the part of laymen and women. The leaders of Christian work during the coming generation are now in the Sunday School classes of our churches, perhaps in a little wayside chapel in the country, in the village church, in the mission or settlement house, or in the great city church.

IV. A Converted Brother (vv. 17-19).

The fears of Ananias that Saul might still be a worker of evil (v. 13) are soon overcome by God's assurance that in the praying Saul He had prepared for Himself "a chosen vessel" (v. 15) to bear the gospel to the Gentiles and to kings, as well as to Israel.

It is interesting to observe that Saul knew nothing of that subtle hypocrisy known as being "a secret believer," for at once he made open confession of his faith in baptism, and "straightway he preached Christ in the synagogues that he is the Son of God" (v. 20).

WHAT to EAT and WHY

C. Houston Goudiss Shows How the Right Foods Can Help to Guard Against Springtime Debility

By C. HOUSTON GOUDISS

THE gap between winter and spring has always been recognized as a trying period. Work seems a burden, tempers are short, appetites are poor, and little enjoyment is derived from meals.

Just as the daily tide of human vitality is at a low ebb during the hours before dawn, so does the annual tide of health reach a low ebb in the weeks that mark the end of winter and the official beginning of spring.

Bodily reserves have been gradually depleted until many children and adults suffer from lassitude and fatigue that cannot be dispelled merely by getting a good night's sleep.

The Best Spring Tonic

A generation ago it was believed that sulphur and molasses, and sassafras tea would overcome springtime debility. Homemakers dosed their families with a variety of so-called tonics, in a frantic effort to put color into pale cheeks, to soothe irritable nerves, to overcome that tired feeling.

We know today why their efforts met with little success. For we have learned what they could not know—that the best possible tonic is a carefully chosen diet rich in minerals and vitamins.

In those days, the science of nutrition was in its infancy. Vitamins were still undiscovered, and there was much that we had not learned about the role of the mineral salts in regulating body processes. No wonder mothers grasped at any mixture that promised to put roses back into the cheeks of their anemic-looking children.

How lucky we are today! For science has taught us what we should eat to help increase pep and vitality, and build rich red blood. And modern methods of transportation, refrigeration, food preservation and packaging, have made the necessary foods easily available. It merely remains for the homemaker to acquaint herself with the nutritional needs of her family.

Enriching the Blood

The blood is frequently impoverished by the time spring puts in an appearance. That is not surprising, for in many households the winter diet contains a preponderance of carbohydrates and fats, with far too few of the precious minerals and vitamins. It is often deficient in iron, the mineral that is required for the formation of the hemoglobin or red pigment in the blood, and in copper, which is required for the proper utilization of iron.

Inasmuch as 3 per cent of the blood cells are destroyed daily, it is obvious that unless adequate amounts of iron-rich foods are available to replace them, the number will soon become subnormal. Moreover, it has been found that many minor disturbances of the body cause a loss of iron, and that mild infections are a common cause of iron loss.

Thus, individuals who have been consuming a diet that is barely adequate in respect to iron may find themselves on the borderline of iron deficiency following an infection.

Iron-Rich Foods

Every homemaker, therefore, should make a determined effort to include plenty of iron-rich foods in her menus. These foods include liver, eggs, whole grain cereals, dried fruits, lean meats and green leafy vegetables.

Green vegetables cannot be emphasized too strongly, for they tend somewhat to be crowded out of the winter diet by the starchy and fatty foods which provide more heat and energy. And investigations with children have demonstrated that when vegetables and fruits are limited, there is a certain sluggishness of blood formation. Green vegetables not only supply iron in significant amounts, but their iron has been found to be especially well absorbed from the digestive tract.

Eat More Greens

Right now it is most important to provide large amounts of dandelion greens, spinach, kale, chard, watercress, lettuce and green cabbage. Serve a cooked green vegetable at one meal each day and a generous green salad at another.

Top the salad with fruit, if you want to add more minerals and vitamins . . . segments of orange or grapefruit, slices of banana or pineapple, or a mixture of apple and celery.

These fruits also supply important minerals and vitamins, and like the green vegetables, they leave an alkaline ash following digestion, and therefore help to maintain the acid-base balance of the body.

Plenty of Bulk Required

There is still another reason why green vegetables and fruits should be consumed in liberal quantities. These foods, along with whole grain cereals, provide an abundance of bulk or cellulose which is necessary to help promote regularity. They tend to offset the effects of a too highly concentrated winter diet. Very often that feeling of lassitude, mistakenly called spring fever, can be overcome by adding to the diet a larger proportion of these naturally laxative foods.

It's also desirable to take an adequate supply of fluids to help flush the system of waste. In addition to a generous amount of water, there should be a pint of milk daily for every adult, a quart for every child, and fruit juices in abundance. Orange juice, grapefruit juice, pineapple juice and tomato juice all supply vitamins A, B and C, and their refreshing fruit acids have a beneficial effect upon the appetite.

Exercise and Fresh Air

Two more splendid antidotes for the let-down feeling that comes at this season are moderate exercise and fresh air. The proper use of the muscular system is important to health and vitality, yet many people go through the winter taking far too little exercise.

In general, you will eat better, sleep better, feel more alert and at the same time more relaxed, if you make a point of getting out into the open every day.

Sleep, sunshine, fresh air and the right food—these are Nature's tonics!

TIPS to Gardeners

Give Flowers a Break

DON'T put an added burden on your flowers by asking them to grow in conditions to which they are not suited. Flowers are like races of humans. Some thrive in warm, moist climates. Others, through the centuries, have become accustomed to intensive cold.

Certain flowers, for instance, may be grown successfully in comparatively cool, semi-shaded locations. If you have such spots in your yard, don't plant your zinnias or petunias there.

Any of the following will prove more satisfactory, according to Harry A. Joy, flower expert: Annuals — balsam, clarkia, coleus, nasturtium, pansy, calendula and vinca; perennials—English daisy, campanula, columbine, myosotis, sweet William and viola.

If you live in drouthy sections or if your flower beds are on well-drained soil in full sun, try the following: Annuals—abronia, ageratum, alyssum procumbens, arctotis, calliopsis, candytuft, cosmos, four o'clock, lupin texensis, petunia, portulaca, sunflower, verbena, and zinnia; perennials—coreopsis and hollyhock.

CHOOSE FERRY'S Dated Seeds you know they'll grow

DISAPPOINTING stands of vegetables and flowers may be caused by seeds that have become too old to produce first-class crops.

It's this way A news dispatch the other day said the White House was a bother because there were mice in the suite to be used by the Royalty The big problem confronting Mrs Roosevelt and White House officials was how to get rid of the mice before the King and Queen arrived It would never do to have mice scampering around the Queens bedroom

Knit Oval Rag Rug In Various Colors

By RUTH WYETH SPEARS

SO MANY of you have asked for the rug leaflet with the books offered below that I am sketching still another interesting rug for you here. Keep it for your scrap book, and be sure to order the leaflet to add to your collection of rug ideas.

Cut or tear the rags ¾ inch wide and use knitting needles ⅜ inch in diameter. Knit the oval center first. Cast on four stitches and increase one at the end of each row until the depth of the work is 4-inches, then knit evenly for 10-inches. Bind off one stitch at the end of each row until you have four stitches left. Bind these off. The diagram gives the dimensions and colors for the bands that are sewn to this center oval. Cast on seven stitches to start each band. For the outside band, start with color 3. Knit 7-inches, then cut the fabric strip and sew color 4 to it. Continue. Use a large crochet hook and fabric strips to crochet around the oval and the outside edges of the bands. Sew together with double carpet thread.

Note: Mrs. Spears' Sewing Book 2, Gifts, Novelties and Embroideries, contains 48 pages of step-by-step directions which have helped thousands of women. If your home is your hobby you will also want Book 1—SEWING, for the Home Decorator. Order by number, enclosing 25 cents for each book. If you order both books, copy of the new Rag Rug Leaflet will be included free. Those who have both books may secure leaflet for 6 cents in postage. Address Mrs. Spears, 210 S. Desplaines St., Chicago, Ill.

International

Since last autumn's Munich conference the U. S. has popped in and out from internationalism to isolation, occasionally sticking its political neck into affairs where many people thought it had no business. Samples: Secretary of the Interior Harold Ickes' tirades against the Nazis, contrasted with congress' reticence to approve U. S. arms sale to European democracies. The apparent sum total of this vaccilating foreign policy has been confusion, yet there is good evidence that U. S. pro-democracy pressure has exerted enough international influence to swing the world from war to peace.

Most definite U. S. aid has been the sale of airplanes to France and Britain, allowing those nations to change their armies overnight from weak, cowering units to potent forces which neither Hitler nor Mussolini dared trifle with.

But a more positive U. S. aid has been the moral support tendered France and Britain via both direct statement and round-about action. Not confirmed, but well authenticated, is the report that President Roosevelt injected a sedative into jittery France and Britain by advising those chancellories to resist any new Rome-Berlin demands. Since foreign trade is an important weapon of the 1939 model aggressor, the U. S. inflicted its deepest wound in German-Italian ambitions by formulating an important trade and credit pact with Brazil, largest and most important of the much-coveted South American nations.

Though many countries (like Argentina, Chile and Peru) have accepted totalitarian trade gestures, the U. S.-Brazilian pact politely hints that it would not be wise for South American nations to become too entangled with Europe. Moreover the pact gives Brazil enough financial encouragement to make her tomorrow's No. 1 South American nation, whose example her neighbors will be wise to follow. Gist of the pact: In return for Brazilian thawing out of frozen American credits and resumption of payments on Brazilian bonds held here, the U. S. will place $69,000,000 in credits at Brazil's disposal, also making other efforts to stimulate the country's industrial output and her trade with the U. S.

How these developments have strengthened the European backbone is immediately apparent. Great Britain has defied Nationalist Spain's blockade of the Loyalist coastline, risking a major incident by sending two destroyers to rescue a British freighter which had been seized by Generalissimo Francisco Franco's warships. Britain has pledged her aid to France against Mediterranean territorial demands by Italy. But most important, London has regained her confidence to the point of making public recommendation that Europe's five powers (France, Britain, Italy, Germany and Russia) vow a five-year peace. The proposal, as voiced by Home Secretary Sir Samuel Hoare: "Suppose in the space of five years there were neither wars nor rumors of wars, and suppose the peoples of Europe were able to free themselves of the nightmares that haunt them and from the expenditures that beggar them? Here, indeed, is the greatest opportunity ever offered to leaders of the world."

SIR SAMUEL HOARE
He idealized, but nobody listened.

Sir Samuel explained that Europe's big five would be "blessed in their efforts by the President of the United States," but the Washington that inspired his outburst was less eager to endorse it. Recalled was Secretary of State Cordell Hull's statement of February 13, to the effect that the time is not yet ripe for disarmament talk.

Italians commented the plan was "so vague it is not worth considering." Germany grumbled about the lack of "tangible proposals," and within 24 hours something else had happened to blow Sir Samuel's idealistic plan to kingdom come:

Czecho-vs.-Slovakia. Traditional bad blood between Czechs and Slovaks has been hidden under the mantle of Czechoslovakia's democracy for 20 years. Last autumn, when Germany grabbed Sudetenland and humbled the Prague government, autonomy moves started in Slovakia (central province) and Ruthenia (far eastern province). Hungary and Poland wanted to grab off Slovakia or Ruthenia, or both, thereby gaining a common frontier. Hitler objected because Czechoslovakia was now his path to the east from which may some day start a pan-Ukraine movement.

Recognizing in Germany a common danger, Poland, Czechoslovakia and Hungary have grown more independent of late, while Hitler has speeded autonomy agitation in both Slovakia and Ruthenia, now renamed Carpatho-Ukraine. Finally becoming desperate and spunky, Prague purged pro-Nazi officials in Carpatho-Ukraine, following this a few days later by ousting Slovakia's priest-premier, Dr. Joseph Tiso. The allegation: That Dr. Tiso was consorting with Berlin, which turned out to be an obvious fact when the premier began sending secret messages to Adolf Hitler.

Though the new Czech crisis was apparently settled a few days later by appointment of moderate Carl

Agent of a new cause celebre?

Sidor as Slovak premier, the terrific implications of German intervention were soon realized. Berlin's press wept for the Slovaks just as it wept for the Austrians and Sudetens last year. Like an earlier "fuehrer" named Konrad Henlein (champion of the Sudetens) Dr. Tiso flew to Germany for consultation while his aides made fiery pro-Nazi speeches.

Finally, on the first anniversary of Austria's downfall, Germany ordered Czechoslovakia sliced into three "independent" states—Bohemia, Slovakia and Carpatho-Ukraine. Though each state was to decide for itself whether this independence was desired, there remained little doubt but that Nazi pressure would bring a favorable decision. As a result Der Fuehrer cleared the way for his drive into the Ukraine, replacing one strong nation with three weak ones. Moreover, since the Reich now lords it over Bohemia, Slovakia and Carpatho-Ukraine, there is no hope that Poland or Hungary will block the Ukrainian drive by swallowing one of these states.

Such developments made Europe forget Sir Samuel Hoare's peace plan. But what Europe could not forget is that both Britain and France agreed to guarantee Czechoslovakia's new boundaries after the Munich conference, a guarantee which has now been ignored. Whereas but a few weeks ago London and Paris claimed to have regained their strength and abandoned the "appeasement" policy, it is now evident that no such thing has happened.

LUIGI CARDINAL MAGLIONE

The new, 62-year-old papal secretary of state is a lifelong friend and one-time classmate of the former Eugenio Cardinal Pacelli, who appointed him after being elevated to the post of Pope Pius XII. Ordained in 1901 in his native Italy, Cardinal Maglione immediately entered the Vatican's diplomatic service, going to Switzerland in 1918 and to Palestine in 1920 as archbishop of Caesaria. His first nunciature was in Switzerland but it was in France that he gained such appreciation that he won the Grand Cross of the Legion of Honor. In 1935, when created a cardinal, he received his biretta from the hands of the French president. Since then he has been in Rome as head of the congregation of the council. His appointment to the papal state secretaryship is considered significant of the Vatican's continued strong position concerning totalitarian states, since the Italian government has registered displeasure over the appointment.

England

From mid-May to mid-June, Great Britain's King George and Queen Elizabeth will be guests of the North American continent on a junket which most good Americans regard as a simple, friendly gesture. But as travel time approaches, the royal expedition is meeting with far more distracting bogeymen than Toronto's Dionne quintuplets, which are being shipped 180 miles under protest to curtsy before their queen.

From June 8 to 11 the royal party will visit the U. S. Because the entire journey was planned last winter in the heat of international chatter about "democratic solidarity," more than one anti-Chamberlain writer has tried to place the prime minister in a difficult position. A sample, by one Peter Howard in Lord Beaverbrook's Daily Express: "Now the royal visit puts Chamberlain himself on trial. If it succeeds Chamberlain goes up. If it fails he goes down."

What Englishmen mean by "success" or "failure" of the American visit was finally brought into fairly close focus, but it still remained a doubtful quantity. Probable meaning: The visit will "fail" if U. S. citizens get the impression that King George and Queen Elizabeth are making a begging expedition to gain American aid in pulling England's chestnuts out of the European fires the squirrel: The Democrats were elected in 1932 because the Republicans had done nothing but "fumble the ball." After the Democrats took office they discarded their "excellent platform" and have since "produced little else than a great national headache."

For the edification of any newspaper reporter who would listen, Mr. Mason put the following prophetic words into the mouth of his mythical furry sage:

"It offers a real opportunity for your Republicans, and should present a challenge to your party. Father Time and vicissitudes of political fortune have kindly removed most of your old discredited leaders. New leaders have developed . . . The elephant has fully recovered from his sleeping sickness . . . All signs point to a landslide in 1940."

A River Is Their Memorial

AWAY back in 1739 Pierre and Paul Mallet, Canadian traders, heard of the wealth of far-away Santa Fe where, it was said, the Spanish senors wore silver buttons on their clothes and the senoritas had silver heels on their slippers. So they enlisted six other venturesome Canadians and after a long journey by boat and pack train, arrived in the New Mexican capital.

The Spanish governor was friendly but there was a law against free trading. So the Mallets started north, crossed the headwaters of the Canadian (called the Colorado by the Spaniards because of its red waters) and followed up the Purgatoire to its junction with the Arkansas. There the party split up. Three of the men, who were homesick, started overland for Canada and eventually reached Montreal safely.

The Mallets, accompanied by two others, went down the Arkansas and the Mississippi to New Orleans, where they reported their explorations to Bienville, the governor, whose efforts to find a route to Santa Fe had been unsuccessful. He engaged them to guide another expedition led by Andre de la Bruyere, a royal officer, who was to ascend the Mississippi and Arkansas to the mouth of the Canadian, which the Mallets correctly guessed arose "less than 40 leagues from Santa Fe."

When the Canadian dwindled away to a mere brook in central Oklahoma, Bruyere sat down to wait for it to rise, instead of buying horses from the Osages to transport his goods, as the Mallets advised him to do. But it was a dry year and, after waiting six months, Bruyere went back to New Orleans. The Mallets returned to Canada, where they disappeared from history, but today the Canadian river is a 760-mile-long memorial to the two brothers "whose wanderings rank them on a par with La Salle."

Klondike Kate

HER neighbors in Bend, Ore., know her as Mrs. John Matson, or "Aunt Kate" Matson, but to old sourdoughs who mushed over Alaskan trails during the gold rush days of '98, she always has been and still is "Klondike Kate." The daughter of a Seattle judge, Kate Betts spent most of her early life in a convent. Then a reverse in the Betts family fortune took her from behind its walls and started her on her career of adventure.

She was in Seattle when the stampede to Alaska started. She joined the gold rush and finally found herself in rip-roaring Dawson City. There she became the belle of the bars and a favorite of the bearded prospectors who came to town eager to spend money after their struggles to gain a fortune from the frozen soil. They showered their nuggets upon "Klondike Kate"—she often made as much as $150 a night by singing and dancing for them. Once a miner gave her $750 in "dust" simply for the privilege of sitting and talking to her.

But like many others, she brought little of her money back to the States with her when the boom days were over. Finally in 1933 she received a letter from 70-year-old John Matson, who had known her in the Dawson City days and who wanted to marry her. The marriage took place in Vancouver, B. C. Then she settled down in the little Oregon city, no longer the famous "Klondike Kate," the toast of Alaskan gold camps, but "Aunt Kate" to the home-folks.

First Into Antarctic

THEY tell tall tales of explorations in the Antarctic. None of them can compare, though, with the trip of Nathanial B. Palmer if sheer adventure is the standard. Away back in 1820 he was the first voyager to reach the northern fringe of the Antarctic continent.

A tall, blonde, Connecticut Yankee, Nat Palmer was still only in his teens when he made the voyage as skipper of the sloop Hero. The ship which penetrated farther south than any other up until that time was only 50 feet long—half the size of the sailboat "America," original winner of the first America's Cup race in 1851.

The voyage is more remarkable, too, when you consider that it was made almost 100 years before the poles were finally reached.

Palmer himself has said, "I pointed the bow of the little craft to the south'ard and, with her wings spread, mainsail abeam, jib abreast the opposite bow, she speeded on her way to new sealing ground like a thing of light . . . With her flowing sheet she seemed to enter into the spirit which possessed my ambition, flew along the wave and over billow until she brought in sight of land not laid down on my chart . . ." Thus this lad discovered Palmer land, archipelago of the Antarctic continent, and proved by his description that he was as literary as he was adventurous.

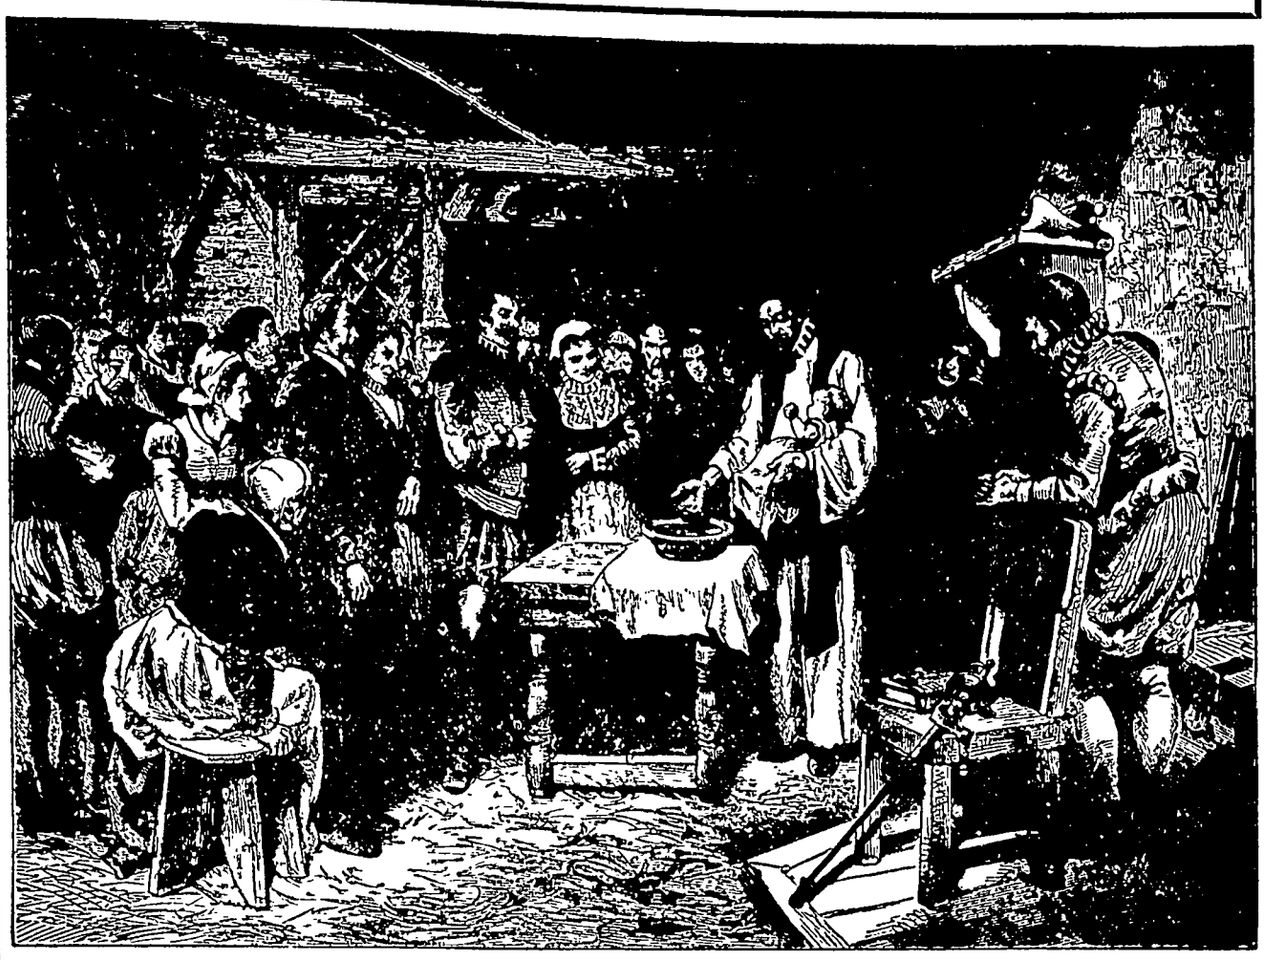
"Virginia Dare Stone" at Georgia College Recalls Romantic Story of The "Lost Colony of Roanoke"



THE BAPTISM OF VIRGINIA DARE (From an old wood cut.)

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

© Western Newspaper Union.

THE recent announcement that Brenau college at Gainesville, Ga., has acquired as a permanent possession the enigmatic "Virginia Dare Stone," which purports to tell the fate of the "lost colony of Roanoke," has revived interest once more in one of the most fascinating mystery stories in history.

This stone, which was found last year on the east bank of the Chowan river in eastern North Carolina, bears on one side an inscription which is, in effect, an epitaph for Virginia Dare, the first English child born in America, and her father, Ananias Dare, since it says that they "went hence into Heaven in 1591." Also on this side is a request that the stone be borne to Gov. John White of Virginia so that he might send aid to the colony.

The other side of the slab has a message inscribed in Elizabethan characters and signed with the initials E. W. D. (presumably Eleanor White Dare, daughter of Governor White and mother of Virginia Dare) which tells how the colonists went up Albemarle Sound and into the Chowan river soon after White returned to England for supplies in 1587.

In four years, the message says, they were reduced in number to 24 by sickness and death at the hands of hostile Indians. Finally in 1591 the savages killed all but seven of the remaining colonists and they were buried on small hills near the river.

The story on the stone is logical enough, according to historians who have examined it. But acceptance of its information as a final solution of the famous mystery must await corroborative evidence.

Authentic or Hoax?

Is the "Virginia Dare Stone" an authentic relic of the "Lost Colony" or is it another hoax? Opinion on that point is divided. Some believe that there is quite as much reason for regarding it as genuine as there is for accepting as authentic the "Sir Francis Drake Plate" which was found out in California a short time before the discovery of this stone.

Others believe that this stone was "planted," as was the lead plate, which was found in Washington, D. C., in 1924. This plate, about the size of an automobile license tag, bore the inscription:

"Virgina Dare
Died Here
Captif Powhatan
1590"

The discovery of this plate and with it several other articles, supposed to be the personal property of Virginia Dare, aroused a great deal of interest at the time. But it soon died down when an examination of the "relics" by experts showed that the whole thing was a hoax.

The "Virginia Dare Stone" may turn out to be another fake. But, even so, it can not detract from the interest which Americans will always have in her story, compounded, as it is, of a very small amount of fact and a larger mass of legend. The fact part constitutes one of the briefest bits of biography in all American history. It is composed of this statement of her grandfather, Gov. John White, in a letter to Sir Walter Raleigh:

"The 18th (August, 1587) Elyoner (Eleanor), daughter to the governor and wife to Ananias Dare, one of the assistants, was delivered of a daughter in Roanoke, and the same was christened there the Sunday following and because this child was the first Christian born in Virginia, she was named Virginia."

That is absolutely all that is certainly known of her. The rest is supposition, plus legend.

VIRGINIA DARE
From an old woodcut in "North Carolina Illustrated" in Harper's New Monthly Magazine, 1857.

Between 1584 and 1587 Sir Walter Raleigh sent out three expeditions to colonize Virginia but they failed to become permanent settlements because they were composed entirely of men. Raleigh finally realized that something else was needed—women and children. So the expedition which he sent out in 1587, headed by John White, who was to be governor of "The Citie of Raleigh in Virginia," included 17 women and children. Among them were White's daughter, Elyoner White Dare and her husband, Ananias Dare, destined to be the parents of the first English child born in what is now the United States.

Because of trouble with his crew, White was not able to take the colonists to a location on Chesapeake Bay as instructed. Instead he stopped at Roanoke Island in search of 15 men left behind the previous year by Sir Richard Grenville, leader of another Raleigh expedition. After they landed, White decided to remain on Roanoke Island for a time at least and set about building a town.

Returns to England.

Then followed the birth of his granddaughter and soon afterwards White decided to return to England. He started on August 27, leaving 120 settlers at Roanoke. When he arrived in England he found that country busy with preparations to resist the Spanish Armada. His fleet of vessels was seized by the government and when he assembled another it was driven back by pirates near Madeira.

So it was not until 1590 that he was able to obtain passage to America. This was on a privateer fleet of three vessels sent out to prey upon Spanish commerce. After a series of adventures with the enemy, they finally reached Roanoke Island at night and were cheered by the sight of smoke rising and a fire glowing through the trees. When they reached the shore at the north end of the island they blew trumpets and sang familiar English songs.

But instead of the joyous welcome which they expected to receive, they were greeted with silence. They found only the footprints of the Indians who had fled at their approach but on a tree was carved the letters C R O. Pushing on to the site of the "Citie of Raleigh" they discovered that the houses had been taken down and the place enclosed with a high palisade. On one of the posts at the right side of the entrance was carved the word "Croatan" and inside the fort were "many bars of iron, two pigs of lead, four iron-fowlers, iron locker shot, and such like heavy things, thrown here and there, almost overgrown with grass and weeds." But there was no other sign of the colony.

No Distress Sign.

Before leaving, White had instructed the colonists, if they decided to move, to carve their destination on a tree, adding a cross if they were in distress. The absence of a cross from the tree and the post on which they found the carved words gave White hope that his people were still living. Croatan Island was the site of a village of Indians whose chief, Manteo, had been to England with the first Raleigh expedition and who was friendly to the English. It was situated on Pamlico Sound, according to a map drawn by White, or it may have been the island of which Cape Hatteras, N. C., is now a part.

But when White urged the captain of the privateering fleet to send a party to Croatan his request was refused. Their supplies were low and the captain was anxious to resume his operations against the Spanish. Later Sir Walter Raleigh sent no less than five expeditions to search for his "Lost Colony." But the seas were swarming with Spanish privateers and there is no record that any of the ships reached Croaton.

When the first permanent English settlement was established at Jamestown, Va., in 1607, a party was sent out to try to learn the fate of the colonists. They gathered conflicting stories from the Indians. One of them was that the colonists had lived peacefully with the Indians for a while. Then they were all suddenly slain by orders of Chief Powhatan. Another story said that all except four men and two boys were killed while still other versions indicated that one girl was spared. From these versions sprang the legends that have grown up around the name of Virginia Dare.

For more than a century the vicinity of the ill-fated colony was unexplored and its fate accepted as an unsolved mystery. Then in 1709 John Dawson, an English explorer, visited the Hatteras Indians who had gray or blue eyes and were familiar with the art of reading, in that they knew that the English "could make paper speak." These Indians were less than 100 in number and it was believed that they were descendants of survivors of the Roanoke Colony who had been assimilated into the Indian tribe living on Croatan Island.

Was Virginia Dare one of the survivors and did the blood of the first English child born in the United States flow in the veins of this mixed race? No one knows for sure and it is probable that no one will ever know.

Among the legends that have grown around the name of Virginia Dare is the one which says that mother and daughter were among the survivors of the Lost Colony, that the Indians gave Mrs. Dare the name of the White Doe and her little girl the name of the White Fawn and that she was beloved by a brave young chief. After the White Fawn's death her spirit assumed the form of that graceful animal and at times lingered fondly around the place of her birth, often gazing wistfully out over the sea. The legend also has her slain in that form by her lover who had been persuaded that the enchanted arrow he used would restore her to him in the flesh he had known and adored.

Did She Escape?

That Virginia Dare may have been one of the survivors is indicated by William Strachey, secretary of the Jamestown colony, in his "The History of Travaile," written in 1612, concerning the events that occurred in Virginia in 1608-10. In the first volume of that work he says:

"At Peccarecommek and Ochanahoen, by the relation of Machamps, the people have houses built with stone walls, and one story above another, so taught them by those English who escaped the slaughter at Roanoke, at which time this, our colony, under the conduct of Captain Newport, landed within the Chesapeake bay; where the people breed up tame turkeys about their houses . . . and where, at Ritanoe, the Weroance Eyanoco preserved seven of the English alive, four men, two boys and one young maid, who escaped the massacre and fled up the River Chanoke (Chowan). This young maid may have been Virginia Dare, who, at the time mentioned, would have been about 21 years of age."

If she did survive it is possible that she may have grown up among the Indians and married one of them, thus giving some basis for the legend cited above. Another legend describes her as a beautiful girl whom the magic of a rejected suitor changed into a white doe and the silver arrow of another warrior restored to human form.

That legend of the white doe and the silver arrow, or, as some versions have it, the silver bullet, has survived all the years, and is known from Maine to Florida. It was probably the inspiration for Bryant's poem, "The Whitefooted Deer," of the old-time school reader.

Still another version of the story forms the basis for Mary

THE MAID OF MYSTERY
Statue of Virginia Dare by Miss Louisa Lander.

Johnston's novel "Croatan" who accepts the theory that the colonists were adopted into the Hatteras tribe and amalgamated with them. She makes Virginia Dare the heroine of her story. She shows the despondent colonists, apparently deserted by the mother country, beset by hostile Indians, falling in with the proposal of the friendly Hatteras Indians and abandoning their settlement to go with the natives to their own villages.

Virginia is reared among the Croatans, later is captured by another band of Indians, who look upon her as a goddess, is rescued by her sweetheart, Miles Darling, and they return together to Croatan town, which they regard as their real and only home.

Statue's Romantic History.

Besides being the inspiration for Bryant's poem "The White-Footed Deer," Virginia Dare was also the inspiration for another poem, "The White Doe," by Mrs. R. R. Cotton. That in turn, was the inspiration for a statue which, itself, has had a romantic history. It was carved in Rome in 1860 by Miss Louisa Lander. On its way to America, the ship bearing the statue was wrecked off the Spanish coast. For two years the figure lay in the ocean's depths. Then the vessel was raised, the statue recovered and taken to New York.

While on display there it was nearly destroyed by fire. In her will, Miss Lander bequeathed it to the North Carolina Hall of History in Roanoke where it was finally placed a few years ago.

This statue called "The Maid of Mystery," shows Virginia Dare grown to womanhood and the costume, such as there is, is decidedly a Grecian or Roman type rather than the Indian type which she probably wore. For if she ever grew to womanhood it was while she was a captive among the Indians, or an adopted daughter and the wife of an Indian chief—that is, if we accept the legends!

ICE GOES OUT OF LAKE; WATER HIGH THIS SEASON

CLEAR LAKE—The ice went out of the lake Friday night before a strong wind which simply dissolved what was left of the winter's accumulation. The ice was coming in toward the east shore quite heavily Friday afternoon but the wind went down toward evening so that not much was piled up along the shore. April 1 is a comparatively late date for the ice to disappear although in 1936 the date was April 11 and in 1937, April 12.

In 1938 the date was March 22, and in 1931, March 3. The gauge for measuring the height of the water will be set soon. The lake is high this spring

CHILDREN INVITED TO TAKE PART IN SECOND ANNUAL FUN FROLIC

Rural And Town Children Will Get Basketfull Of Colored Eggs

At the meeting of the Klemme Civic Club Thursday evening, it was decided to again stage an Easter Egg Hunt in Klemme for the children of the rural community and the children of Klemme. The hunt will be held the day before Easter, which is this week Saturday, at 2:30 o'clock.

The business and professional people of Klemme are inviting all of the boys and girls of ten years and under to take part part in the fun. There will be plenty of pretty colored eggs for every boy and girl, as well as prize eggs. Special attention will be given the smaller children so that they can have their share of eggs. All children should bring their own basket or a paper bag in which to place the eggs.

Hunt Begins At 2:30 P. M.

The boys and girls are asked to meet on the vacant lot between the Wellemeyer Store and Lau's Implement Store, where they will be given instructions as to how many eggs each will be alowed to pick up and will be given directions as to where to find the eggs.

Colored Eggs Will Be Hidden

A special committee, in charge of W. F. Pavey, will hide the eggs and direct the search. Prize eggs, good for a candy bar or other nickel treat, will be plain white. They will bear the name of a business or professional man, who will redeem the eggs when brought to his or her place of business.

Children Will Be Looked After

A school boy patrol, in charge of Supt. W. Henry Galbreth, will watch over the youngsters and see that the hunt is carried out in an orderly manner, and that the small children be given special attention. The girl scouts will also assist in helping the small children.

Parents are urged to come to town early, Satudray, April 8th, so that their children may enjoy the fun. It's all free and this special entertainment is especially for the children of the community.

Girl Scouts Color Eggs

The Girl Scouts, under the direction of Mrs. E. G Schaeffer, wi'l again assist in this community project by coloring the eggs and assisting with the work.

RUSSIA VS. JAPAN IN ASIA, ON LAND AND SEA
Fish and an old grudge provide a crisis.

EDITOR'S NOTE—When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of the news analyst, and not necessarily of the newspaper.

International

Since Russia was ignored at the Munich conference last September, the Soviet has withdrawn to its shell, apparently content to fight internal problems and let the rest of the world fight Adolf Hitler. This action was justified. France, Britain, Italy and Germany ignored Moscow in settling the Sudeten issue; apparently Russia was not wanted in Europe, and anyway Japan was barking at her vulnerable Asiatic door.

But necessity sometimes makes strange bedfellows. Though Communism looks far more like Nazism than Democracy, Russian-German interests clash on two vital points: (1) Hitler wants the Russian Ukraine, a vast expanse of rich and fertile land which now gives Russia most of its oil, wheat, meat and mineral; (2) Germany's ally in the vengeful anti-Communist pact is Japan, and Japan is Russia's most ancient and bitter enemy.

Hence Russia has emerged on the international front once more as a direct aftermath of Germany's Czechoslovakian seizure. Huge, mysterious, of unknown strength, the blundering nation whose army collapsed amidst its last European venture during the World war, finds itself threatened simultaneously on both east and west:

CAROL AND GEORGE

West. Czechoslovakia's fall brought Hitler part way to the Ukraine but alien soil still stood as a barrier. To cross the Russian frontier German troops must pass through either Rumania or Poland. The latter nation's hostility to the Reich has increased since Prague's collapse because Warsaw had good reason to fear Germany might annex the Free City of Danzig and close the corridor which is Poland's only outlet to the Baltic or any other sea. Moreover, agitation for German annexation of Lithuania's seaboard town of Memel, and for possible creation of a protectorate over Lithuania itself, would leave Poland surrounded on three sides by Germany and her satellites.

Discarding Poland as a path to the Ukraine, Hitler has turned to Rumania which not only offers a corridor to Russia but many choice spoils besides. The groundwork for this coup was laid last November after King Carol, fearing Nazism, made a desperate bargaining trip to London in search of British-French trade support. Though wined and dined by King George (see photo) and other personages of British royalty who a few years ago had ignored him as a scapegrace, the Rumanian king found London unwilling to play ball. Prime Minister Neville Chamberlain was too busy appeasing Dictators Hitler and Mussolini to risk upsetting Europe's diplomatic applecart with a trade agreement that would discriminate against the Reich.

En route home Carol signed an economic accord at Berlin, accepting for safety's sake a Nazi overlordship he disliked. This was not placed into effect until the Czech coup, when Carol found German troops pounding on his door. Today Berlin controls more than half of Rumania's exports (wheat and oil) and imports (manufactured goods). Once in Bucharest, it is but a short hop to either the Ukraine or such Balkan states as Bulgaria and Yugo-Slavia, where the Master of Central Europe has already made his strength felt.

Though at first happy that German penetration was going eastward instead of into Belgium or France, Europe's democracies have at last realized their error. A month ago Germany was strong militarily but impotent economically, devoid of foreign exchange and short of food. Today, with Czechoslovakia's big gold reserve, with Rumanian wheat and oil, the Reich is strong in all ways, a far greater threat than the empire of 1914.

For Russia, today's situation is more dangerous than last autumn's. With Poland nipped out, the Reich would control the Soviet's entire western frontier, gradually eating into the borderlands by undercover penetration. It was not unexpected, therefore, that Russia should follow Britain and France in protesting the Czech grab, becoming even more alarmed over Rumania's economic collapse. Since the U. S. has also protested by diplomatic note and imposition of an additional 25 per cent tariff on German imports, the red bearded Soviet finds itself no longer isolated but drawn into virtual diplomatic comradeship with the three nations whose democratic political philosophies are farthest removed from its own.

East. Russo-Jap conflict dates in modern history to the war which ended with the treaty of Portsmouth in 1905. Since then ambitious Japan has jumped to the Asiatic mainland and penetrated Manchukuo and Mongolia, both of which front on Russian Siberia. For at least six years this clash of interests has occasioned spasmodic border tussles, most of which went unreported until last summer's Chankufeng hill incident. The simple fact is that slow-moving, stubborn Russians always were and always will be at odds with Japan's attitude of self-righteousness. Asia is not big enough for both.

Last December 31 the fishing rights Japan has enjoyed in Siberian waters since 1905 expired. Russia refused to renew them and Tokyo now plans to send its huge floating canneries into Russian waters during early April, protected by warships. As the crisis approaches, both governments are rushing troops to the Siberian-Manchukuoan frontier where most Oriental observers confidently predict a war must eventually break out.

Significance. European and Asiatic crises are related, insofar as (1) Japan and Germany have a virtual military alliance, and (2) Russia is involved in both disputes. Moreover, Jap aggression the past year has followed amazingly close behind European dictator coups, as when Canton was captured after Munich, and Hainan island was occupied after Barcelona fell. Thus Jap-Italo-German parallel action has already been evidenced. With huge Russia emerging as the unexpected focal point, today's tense situation encircles the world, involving more nations than any period since the World war's heyday.

Agriculture

Time was when last year's price had little effect on this year's crop. Since AAA, however, American farmers have realized the folly of heaping insult on injury by adding new surpluses to already swollen granaries. Lack of export market and heavy production last year sent U. S. farm surpluses to a new high. The expected result, now verified by the department of agriculture's crop reporting board, will be a general cut in this season's production of most products.

Most outstanding fact of the survey is that grain farmers will slash 17 per cent from their spring wheat planting, yet total 1939 wheat acreage is expected to exceed the AAA's announced goal by nearly 11,000,000 bushels. Total winter and spring wheat prospects are for 65,678,000 acres.

Official explanation for the decline: (1) efforts to conform with the soil conservation program; (2) reactions to changing feed requirements to last year's decline; (3) adjustments, necessitated by last year's surpluses.

Estimated 1939 crop acreages (000 omitted):

Mexico

Last year Mexico's President Lazaro Cardenas chased U. S. and British oil companies out of the country and seized their properties. A big enough problem in itself, expropriation loomed still more important in the light of U. S. efforts to solidify the Americas against foreign economic intervention. Meanwhile Mexico made hay by selling its ill-gotten oil to Germany while Pan-American nerves neared the breaking point.

Like other American nations which have tried barter trade agreements with the Reich, Mexico soon discovered she was unable to use the manufactured items Germany offered in lieu of cash. Seizing the opportunity, victimized oil companies sent Donald Richberg, attorney and former "brain truster" to make peace with Senor Cardenas.

Richberg terms: Control of the properties should be returned to the companies long enough for them to break even on all past and present investments. Then the property would revert to Mexico.

Cardenas terms: Co-operative Mexican-company operation of the oil properties, with U. S. and British firms to invest new cash for their development. But Mexico would maintain complete control over the industry.

After two weeks of consultation brought no solution, Mr. Richberg returned home, promising to come back late in April. Hardly had he left, however, before President Cardenas announced his own final terms before 40,000 cheering workers. Mexico will keep the wells, paying indemnification with oil taken from them.

COL. VLADIMAR S. HURBAN

Though a Slovak, and although Hitler has made Slovaks independent of Czechs, Col. Hurban has so much dislike for Germany and Hungary, and so much pride in the late Czecho-slovak nation, that he refused to surrender the Czech legation in Washington to the German ambassador. Born in the Carpathian mountains, he knew Magyar oppression as a child. Becoming a soldier, he went to Russia 30 years ago to accept a professorship in the czar's war college. When the World war broke out he and 70,000 other Czechs joined the Russian army. During the revolution these Czechs made their historic movement to Vladivostok, where the group collected funds to send Hurban to Washington. There he joined Dr. Thomas Masaryk in founding the Czech nation. After the government was established he returned to Washington as Czech military attache, later going to Egypt as charge d'affaires, to Sweden as minister, and in 1936 back to Washington as minister. His greatest accomplishment here was consummation of the Czech-U. S. trade treaty last year, now abrogated under Hitler's "protectorate" regime.

Unlucky North Pole Seeker

ON OCTOBER 25, 1933, an automobile in Washington, D. C., struck down and killed a 71-year-old man who, for 20 years, had defied the numerous pitfalls of death in the frozen North and who once just missed sharing in the honors or of discovering the North pole. He was Evelyn B. Baldwin.

Baldwin first went beyond the Arctic circle in 1893 as meteorologist with Capt. Robert Peary's second expedition to Greenland. On a previous expedition. Perry found what he thought was a "royal road to the pole," via Independence bay.

Baldwin suggested that a better route lay through Kane basin. But Peary decided otherwise. Ironically enough, when Peary did make his successful dash to the pole, several years later it was by the very route which Baldwin had suggested.

In 1897 Baldwin was en route to accompany the famous Andree balloon expedition to find the pole when Andree, suddenly favored by good weather, decided to start, without waiting the arrival of Baldwin's ship next day. On July 11, the ill-fated Andree sailed away, never to be heard of again until 1930 when a party of Norwegian explorers found his skeleton.

But this narrow escape from death did not daunt Baldwin. In 1898 he was second in command of the Wellman expedition which reached the then "farthest north" of 81 degrees and 30 seconds before turning back. Baldwin then set off with several companions and discovered new land, named Graham Bell land.

In 1901 he made his supreme attempt to reach the pole with the Baldwin-Ziegler expedition. It failed because his supply ship did not arrive in time and only good luck prevented the entire party from perishing. Before he could finance another expedition Peary discovered the pole and Baldwin's career as an explorer ended.

Tenderfoot Triumph

IF EVER Americans deserved the title "tenderfeet," it was the band of emigrants, led by John Bidwell, which left Missouri in May, 1841, for the West. They had heard of the riches of California but knew nothing about the country they must cross to gain their promised land. Once they reached the Great Salt lake, they believed they could float down rivers that were supposed to flow to the Pacific. So they took a big supply of tools to build boats when needed.

Guided by Thomas Fitzpatrick, the fur trader, and Father De Smedt, the missionary, they reached South pass in Wyoming safely Then, despite warnings against trying to cross the desert of the Central basin, they turned off from the Oregon trail and headed southwest.

Soon they were in a bewildering country of salt plains. Food and water supplies ran low. Cruel mirages lured them on. But somehow they managed to survive and reach the Humboldt river in Nevada. They followed it to the Humboldt Sink and turned south to the Carson river. By the time they reached the Walker river they were forced to kill the last of their oxen.

Six weary months after leaving Missouri they reached the rich San Joaquin valley. Theirs had been an epic journey. For the success of the Bidwell expedition pointed the way for the first thin trickle of emigration to California that began soon afterwards and reached its high tide in the Golden Days of '49.

Bad Boy of the Mayflower

AMONG the Pilgrim Fathers who came over on the Mayflower was John Billington, accompanied by his wife and two sons, Francis and John Jr. Early in that historic voyage young John disgraced himself. While playing in the family's cabin with his father's fowling piece, he fired the weapon close to an open keg of powder. "Only the Lord's mercy saved the ship and the entire company from being blown to pieces," writes a pious historian of those days

After the Pilgrims had settled Plymouth, young Johnny got into another scrape. He wandered off into the woods one day by himself When he failed to return, a party set out to look for him. After a week's futile search, it was learned that he was in an Indian village 20 miles south of Plymouth.

His mother shed tears of gratitude when friendly Indians brought him back, but some of the Pilgrims were "sorely vexed" because he had put them to all this bother. No doubt, he came by his trouble-making honestly for his father was that kind of man In fact, John Billington, senior, has the unenviable distinction of being the first person hanged in Plymouth colony. He quarreled with young John Newcomin, waylaid him and shot him down. For this willful murder 'by plaine and notorious evidence" he was hanged on September 30, 1630

By LEMUEL F. PARTON

NEW YORK.—When James D. Ross was appointed by the President as chief of Bonneville, the biggest dam in the world, in October, 1937, it was believed in some quarters that his selection would sharpen the disagreement between the administration and the power companies. Today it appears that Mr. Ross has allayed, rather than provoked hostilities. The utilities rate him as "reasonable." Bonneville has been the bete noir of western power development. This writer hears there is now a better chance for two-way appeasement than at any time in the past.

Bonneville Chief Soothes Hostile Power People

Mr. Ross, for 20 years head of the municipal power development of Seattle, has human traits which perhaps account for his expedient rather than doctrinal trend. No mere doctrinaire would amuse himself by keeping a copper ball in the air with no visible means of support—just because he loves kilowatts and likes to see them work.

He was a consulting engineer for the New York power authority and the St. Lawrence seaway, a consultant for PWA power development and later a member of the SEC before the President made him the Bonneville boss. As a boy, he rode his bike from Chatham, Ont., to New York city, to learn pharmacy. He got a job as an apprentice chemist, but pestling seemed piffling, so he hit the long grind back to Chatham—but he kept on pedaling. He headed up through Edmonton to the Alaska gold-fields, and, when dry land failed him, he made his own boat and pushed on. In Seattle, years later, he helped design the first municipal power plant.

YOUNG America is naturally envious of Capt. Harold E. Gray, who will be at the controls when the Yankee Clipper, huge Pan-American Airways flying boat, takes off for its flight across the Atlantic. It is now trying a few preliminary crow-hops around New York harbor.

Gray Skipped No Step to Fly Air Leviathan

Captain Gray, it seems, had a system, in qualifying for this stellar role in aviation. First he became a licensed airplane mechanic; then he qualified as an aeronautical engineer, a master mariner and a radio technician; after all, he took diplomas in metereology, seamanship, international law, admiralty law and business administration.

That seems to be about par for the lad who would be a skipper on one of these new leviathans of the air. All this, and many years of hazardous flying over the mountain wilderness of Mexico and Central America bring Captain Gray to the ripe old age of 33. He left college in his second year at the University of Iowa and was aloft for the first time at the age of 19. His home town is Guttenberg, Iowa.

WARREN LEE PIERSON, head of the Export-Import bank, appears to rate an assist in the Nazi put-out in Brazil. The big credit deal, to clear the trade ways between the two countries, is widely accepted as a goose-egg for the Reich.

Pierson Assists In Nazi Put-Out In Brazil Game

The young and energetic Mr. Pierson, who became head of the bank in 1936, toured the Latin-American countries last summer and fall and returned with a lot of sizzling new ideas about hopping up South American trade, and resisting the totalitarian drive, by deploying credit judiciously where it is needed most to grease the trade run-around.

When it came to Brazil, he got eager attention from both the state department and the administration, as Brazil is an important consideration of naval geography as well as trade. Shouldering far out into the Atlantic, with the new fascist threat to the Canary Islands, it would, if hostile, pinch us in a narrowing seaway, with Argentina, on the whole not so clubby with the U. S. A., away down under. For both strategic and commercial reasons, Brazil is our entrepot to South America, if we keep on being neighborly.

In Harvard law school Mr. Pierson was obsessed with foreign trade and directed his studies to practice in this field. Practicing law in Los Angeles, his opportunity came in 1934, when he was appointed general counsel for the Export-Import bank. In 1936, there was, for him, a timely New Deal row, which resulted in the resignation of George N. Peek as head of the bank and the upping of Mr. Pierson.

Y HORSEBACK, by stage-coach, or aboard the sing coast-wise sailing ssels of the period, there rneyed, just a century and alf ago this year, some r-score men, representing ry state then in our fed-l Union.

hey were the newly-elect-members of the first con-ss of the United States, their way to the opening sion whose sesqui-centen-l America now observes.

mong those travelers were ny whose names were illus-us, then as now. There were nes Madison and James Mon-, destined to become Presi-ts of the United States. Rich-Henry Lee, Robert Morris Charles Carroll, signers of Declaration of Independence, e included in their numbers; were also Rufus King, Roger rman and Pierce Butler, who helped write the federal Con-ution.

ater they were to be joined such noted patriots as George shington, our first President, Thomas Jefferson and Alex-er Hamilton, members of the t cabinet of the republic then he making.

ut great or small, famous or cure, all were headed for the objective—the freshly-refur-ed federal building in the rishing city of New York. re they would represent the ple and the states in the new ional legislature meeting un-a unique and, as yet, untried stitution.

wo years earlier a convention Philadelphia had written that ch-making charter to replace Articles of Confederation ich had proved but "a rope of d." Recognized today as one the greatest state documents ll time, our federal Constitu-n was then regarded more as outlme of government; a leton to be clothed with flesh blood, and to receive the ath of life."

nd while they jogged over rut-roads or through rough wil-ness trails, undoubtedly they ected, those early legislators, the discouraging conditions er which they would meet. to any thoughtful man there then grave cause for pes-ism. At home, freedom, it is e, had been won; but the spec-s of state and national bank-icy, civic disorganization and wing lawlessness cast their om over the land. The na-al territory of 865,000 square es had a population of less n 4,000,000, and much of the ntry through which their ses plodded was still uninhab-. Enacted financial measures, conceived by Alexander Hamilton, which lifted both the nation and the states out of a morass of debt and bankruptcy caused by war and unstable government, and set the country firmly on the road to prosperity. "He smote," said Daniel Webster of Hamilton and his measures, "the rock of national resources, and copious streams of wealth poured forth. He touched the dead corpse of public credit, and it stood forth erect with life."

Whereby it appears, that George Washington, Esq.
Was unanimously elected President, — And John Adams Esq.
Was duly elected Vice President,
Of the United States of America.

Page in the Journal of the First Congress of the United States for April 6, 1789, giving the electoral vote and certifying the election of President George Washington and Vice President John Adams.

GEORGE WASHINGTON

Imposed, "for the payment of the debts of the United States and the encouragement and protection of manufactures," a tariff on imports—thus introducing not only a productive and enduring source of revenue, but a perennial political-economic issue which has persisted to this day.

Provided for and fixed the site of our present national capital—then an undeveloped tract along the Potomac, now the impressively beautiful city of Washington.

They also enacted:

Measures providing for patents and copyrights, for the naturalization of aliens, for a decennial census, the admission of new states, a national banking system, a mint, and our decimal system of coinage.

Legislation encouraging and protecting American shipping so effectively that within a few years the Stars and Stripes floated in every commercial port and on every navigable sea.

Acts and appropriations providing for the salaries of federal officials, (including congressmen themselves) as well as for other "operating expenses" necessary to the young republic.

But above all, they established a sense of security; a confidence, at home and abroad, in the new nation and the new ideal in government it represented. When they ended their sessions, the fog of doubt and despair that had shrouded the great American experiment was largely dispelled. The sun of hope and cheer shone more brightly over the new land.

These wonders had been worked neither quickly or easily. Actually the first congress of the United States got off to a late start. It had been called for March 4, 1789, and, technically, began on that date; but delays, due largely to rough roads, made the necessary quorum in both houses impossible until early April.

Once convened, the congress sat through three sessions, and in two cities—the first session in New York, from April until September 29, 1789; the second, also in New York, from January 4 until August 12, 1790, and the third in Philadelphia, from December 6, 1790, until adjournment on March 3, 1791.

Conflicting Policies.

Nor were its works accomplished in that perfect harmony which their ultimate success might suggest. Bitter were many of the discussions, and caustic some of the personal attacks that marked the debates. During its sessions were fought issues that introduced many of the great party controversies which were to rise and fall throughout the whole future political history of the nation. The conflict between adherents of a strong central government and those who would have power reside in the states—Federalist vs. Anti-Federalist; Hamilton vs. Jefferson—actually created and consistently influenced our two-party political system.

But the inspiring pageant that dramatized the beginning of our federal government thrust into the background for a while all those lurking difficulties. This was the inauguration of George Washington as President of the United States.

Under the Constitutional provisions of that period, the counting of the electoral vote for President had been the first important duty of congress.

Washington's selection was a foregone conclusion, and the count confirmed popular approval. He received 69 votes, representing the whole number of electors casting ballots. Votes for the second candidate, who was to be vice president, were more scattered, but John Adams had been chosen.

It is interesting to observe on the list of those for whom electoral votes were cast the now famous name, Lincoln! This, however, was Gen. Benjamin Lincoln, a hero of the Revolution. More than 70 years were to pass before Abraham Lincoln was nominated and elected under conditions vastly different but scarcely less serious to the future of our federal union.

On March 3, 1791, the first congress of the United States came to a close in historic Independence square, Philadelphia, where the third and final session had been held. Effectively it had fulfilled its mission; devotedly it had supported and made of the Constitution a living force; dramatically it had launched on the seas of progress, a new and noble Ship of State.

How that ship bore, through later storm and calm, the growing nation to a glory of prestige, of expansion and of liberty and well-being for its people unrivaled elsewhere on earth, remains today one of the grandest epics in all history.

Probably never since has America witnessed so colorful and significant an inauguration as that which made George Washington President.

His journey northward from Mt. Vernon had been a continuous ovation. His route was virtually strewn with flowers; his short passage through every community was made the occasion for songs and speeches of affectionate tribute. In New York he was welcomed with pageantry and acclaim.

Such was his enthusiastic welcome. Soon he learned, as has each of his successors, that the criticisms and the headaches were to come.

So; too, did congress. Few, if any, of its important measures passed without the strife which we have grown accustomed to expect on Capitol Hill today.

Even over the title with which the President should be addressed congressmen wrangled. Some, with the forms of royalty still in mind, wanted to refer to him as "His Highness"; others as, "His Mightiness." Senator Ellsworth, of Connecticut, protested, for example, that the plain title "President" was too common. There were, he explained, "presidents of fire companies and of cricket clubs." Something more impressive was desirable.

But the majority denounced titles as dangerous, arrogant and even "idolatrous," and finally the simple constitutional form, "The President of the United States," was adopted.

Dispute Over Tariff.

Probably the first and most lasting legislative antagonisms in congress were roused by the early tariff measures. In offering them, James Madison proposed specific rates on certain articles such as tea, coffee, sugar, molasses, wines, and spirits; an ad valorem tax upon other imports, and various tonnage duties.

But few liked the measures as a whole. The manufacturing districts wanted protection against rival products made with cheaper labor abroad. The South and other agricultural areas objected to high rates, protesting that they would bear the burden. Proposals to tax the importation of slaves aroused bitter debate between North and South.

Heated discussion occurred on the proposal to tax rum—some of it not dissimilar to arguments heard during our recent prohibition period. One member insisted that, in effect, it asked citizens to "drink down the public debt." When an advocate urged the tax as a method of promoting temperance, an opponent pointed out that they were legislating on "revenue, not morals."

But finally the measure passed, including levies on rum. Soon it was yielding some $200,000 a month—a welcome and encouraging income.

Equally bitter was much of the debate over the financial measures proposed by Hamilton to raise funds and to meet the total indebtedness incurred during the war. The debts, both state and national, amounted in all to about $80,000,000—then an imposing figure, however meager it may seem when compared to the billions of public indebtedness created during recent years. The problem, moreover, was complicated by the fact that many of the certificates, bonds and promises-to-pay issued by the earlier government had been sold by their original holders at discount to speculators.

Briefly, Hamilton proposed: first, to fund the national debt by giving the holders of such paper new Federal bonds in exchange; and, second, to have the federal government assume the debts of the states. Violently were such suggestions opposed by members who felt the plan benefited the speculator at the expense of the patriot, and by representatives of those states which had small debts and, therefore, feared discrimination against their constituents.

Sound Finances.

But the proposals carried, firmly establishing confidence in the credit and fiscal soundness of the new nation—then, as now, the true foundation of happiness and prosperity for the people.

Passage of the National Bank, the Mint and Currency Acts further increased the availability of credit and money, thus quickening the young republic's march toward prosperity.

Over salary and appropriation measures there also raged spirited discussion. Economical as those expenditures sound in these days of reckless spending, they then evoked frequent storms of criticism.

To the President was accorded an annual salary of $25,000, which he accepted reluctantly; to senators and representatives a compensation of $6 for every day of attendance, with mileage. The secretaries of state and treasury received $3,500 each; the postmaster-general and the attorney-general, $1,500; the chief justice —John Jay—$4,000, and the other Supreme court justices, $3,500.

Appropriations for the departments, civil list, etc., were similarly modest. To this determination that the people's money should not be wasted, that sound economy should rule; historians attribute much of the fiscal success of the new government

C. Houston Goudiss Discusses Beverages of Various Kinds; Explains Their Role in the Diet

By C. HOUSTON GOUDISS

FOOD and drink are inseparably linked in any consideration of the nutritional needs of man. It is, therefore, in response to a fundamental need that we include some kind of beverage in every meal, no matter how simple or how elaborate the food may be. For primarily, beverages contain water which is as necessary to the human body as air.

Approximately two-thirds of the body is composed of water. It is found in the muscles, in the brain tissue, in the various organs such as liver and kidneys, and even in the bones. Every cell in the body is dependent upon water for its proper functioning.

Body's Need for Liquids

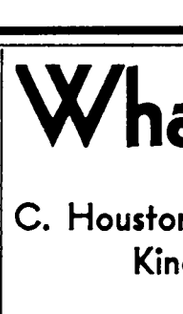
This precious fluid acts as a solvent of food materials and makes possible their digestion and absorption. Since it is an essential constituent of the blood, it helps to transport nutrients to every cell—this function alone requiring about 10 pounds of water in constant circulation. Finally, it helps to eliminate waste products from the body through the lungs, skin and kidneys.



The daily losses of water from the body must be replaced regularly or the consequences may be extremely serious to health. It has been shown that headaches, nervousness and indigestion may result when the intake of fluids is diminished below normal requirements.

Beverages Classified

The quantity of water needed by each person varies with the dietary and with the season of the year, much larger amounts being required when the temperature is high. But it is generally agreed that everyone should consume several glasses of water daily, in addition to the water obtained from foods, chiefly fruits and vegetables. Part of the need is met by milk, and by coffee, tea, cocoa, fruit juices and various other fruit-flavored drinks which add pleasure to mealtime, serve as wholesome, between-meal pick-me-ups, and provide a gracious method of extending hospitality to guests.

Aside from milk, which belongs in a classification by itself, and fruit juices which are consumed chiefly for their minerals and vitamins, beverages fall into two groups which overlap somewhat: those that are refreshing and those that are stimulating.

Refreshing Beverages

The refreshing beverages include fruit juices, fruitades and carbonated drinks, such as ginger ale and sarsaparilla. They are effective in quenching thirst and their appetizing flavors encourage the drinking of generous amounts of water. They also contribute energy values to the diet in proportion to the amount of sweetening used in their preparation.

Fruit juices are most frequently served as an appetizer at breakfast, lunch or dinner. Fruitades are useful as between-meal drinks and when entertaining. Children like to display their hospitality to friends and this type of beverage, served with a few crackers or simple cookies, makes an attractive snack.

Mothers will find it convenient and economical to utilize for this purpose beverage crystals which come in a variety of fruit flavors. These make wholesome, refreshing beverages at a minimum cost; the amount of sweetening may be determined by individual preference; and they are so easily prepared that children may do the mixing themselves.

Stimulating Beverages

The stimulating beverages are coffee, tea, chocolate and cocoa. When made with milk, chocolate and cocoa are rich in nutritive values, though their fuel value varies with the product used. Chocolate is much richer in fat than cocoa, and products labeled "breakfast cocoa" usually contain a larger percentage of the natural cocoa fat than products simply labeled, "cocoa."

The food value of coffee and tea depends entirely upon the cream or milk, and sugar with which they are served. However, they have an important place in the dietary because their flavor and aroma add greatly to the enjoyment of other foods and they give a comfortable feeling of well-being.

The stimulating principle in these beverages is known as caffein in coffee, and thein in tea. Doctors may forbid coffee because of some abnormality in health which makes a stimulant undesirable. But competent authorities hold that the effects of the moderate use of coffee by normal individuals may be disregarded. Neither coffee nor tea, however, should be given to children. First, because they do not need stimulants, and second, because the use of these beverages will tend to reduce the consumption of milk which is so important to their nutritional welfare.

Guard Against Staleness

The subject of coffee has been investigated from many angles by competent scientists, whose findings should be of interest to homemakers. The flavor and aroma of coffee are derived chiefly from a volatile oil, which is developed during the roasting process. But it has been established that this substance is rapidly lost from the coffee upon exposure to air. Moreover, each pound of coffee contains about two ounces of fixed oil which may become rancid in the presence of air. These changes occur whether the coffee is ground or in the bean.

Since stale, flavorless coffee may have an adverse effect upon appetite, it is important to buy a product that is protected against the air, or to choose one that is freshly roasted. The homemaker should also buy coffee in small quantities so that it can be used up quickly once it is opened. After the coffee has been made, there may be a further escape of its flavor and fragrance with both heat and steam. That is why coffee should not be allowed to stand, but should be served the moment it is made, and why it should not be reheated.

Tea also deteriorates when it is stored for long periods. It should therefore be bought in small quantities and kept in air-tight containers.

"Billy" Grosshuesch, star on the Klemme Junior High basketball sqad has been handed a lot of "kidding" the past week. "Bill" pulled a "Corrigan" in a tournament game at Thornton the other day when he made a beautiful dribble and a keen shot . . . that went through the opponent's basket for two points! It was the third time during the playing season that "Billy" displayed his generosity to the opposing team, but at neither time was his gift disasterous to his own team mates. But he more than made up for his "wrong way Corrigan" by dumping in plenty of shots in the "right" hoop.

This week's bouquet goes to the Reformed Church Mixed Chorus and their director, Mr. Batchelder, for the remarkable showing they made when they presented their Easter Cantata to a large crowd Sunday evening. The chorus is composed of approximately forty voices, all young people ranging from high school age and up Only a very few have had any voice training but the group sang very well. By continually working together they should become one of the best singing organizations in North Iowa.

Leonard Lau, who delivers the Sunday Register to farmers in this community was a "track man" in college, but his speed failed him Sunday morning. While out on his route his car became stuck in a soft, muddy spot in the road. Leonard decided by putting the gears in low and then getting out and pushing he could get the car moving . . it did . . . and how. As the car lurched ahead Leonard fell down and the car got the jump on him. Leonard chased the car down the road over a hundred yards but could not catch up. The driverless car then headed for a ditch, broke down three fence posts, tore down some wire and then settled comfortably . . . in the bottom of a three foot ditch. It took Edgar Buss and a tractor to snake the car up on the road again. Leonard got a lot of exercise and the car got a bent fender.

Down at the State House proponents of the farm-to-market road bill suggested that unnecessary enlargements and elaborations of the primary system be halted in favor of secondary road improvement. Reroutings of paved highways around communities is growing in disfavor with the communities affected and an imposing majority have indicated a preference for improved secondary road before further high speed trunk lines are further developed. Governor Wilson rejects definitely any idea of handicapping continued development of the primary system. But he has said that his idea of a state road system was a series of primary and secondary roads that lead somewhere—from community to community, rather than from state line to state line.

Marijuana, the dread "loco weed" which thrives in the soil of Iowa, has been officially branded an outlaw by the legislature. Orders will be issued to the highway commission and township weed commissioners to destroy marijuana wherever found. Smoked in cigarettes loco weed is said to generate a form of vicious insanity and to have been the cause of many vicious crimes. From time to time Iowa communities have been horrified to discover that marijuana has been cultivated in their communities and sold to high school pupils in the form of cigarettes. The bill as passed by the House is brief and simple. It merely includes marijuana with other obnoxious weeds which must be destroyed by law.

We gather the following odds and ends from our correspondent at the State House:

New leases on office buildings for state departments have a cancellation clause in anticipation of a new state office building . . . . . chain store and itinerant merchant legislation will hearten local businessmen . . . . . Governor Wilson is sending an addition to the elephant collection of a Pennsylvania woman who sent the Governor a crocheted doily . . . . . Frank Hanson, Deputy State Auditor, had a birthday March 28 but refuses to say which 66th birthday it is . . . . the great fleet of state automobiles ordered out of service by the Executive Couscil will be sold at public auction . . . . .

to lace for the wedding gown ever a favorite the more so spring in that enthusiasm for is so general throughout all ondom. The gown pictured fits the springtime wedding scene with queenly grace. Its artful soft styling brings skirt fullness to the front in latest approved manner. Its form-fitting midriff accents a slender waistline as is required of fashions today. The heart-shaped neckline and the high shouldered full-at-top long fitted sleeves are significant styling details.

No matter how entrancing her gown, a bride fails at looking her prettiest if her headdress and veil do not flatter. Here again is fashion indulgent to the spring bride, in that the new fantasies of tulle and flowers and lace include every possible type, suited to every individuality. Best of all, in the modern way of doing things there is no fuss or flurry at the last moment to get the veil pinned into shape by nervous unskilled fingers, for that has been taken care of in advance by specialists. All that is required of the bride-to-be is to take her milliner into confidence long before the happy day or the consulting adviser in the wedding bureau where you are supposed to come and ask questions, as established nowadays in all high-class establishments. If it is a period type, or a youthful ingenue headdress, or a stately coronet, if it be a simple inexpensive piece or a most elaborate one let your needs be known and by some magic, it's there before your very eyes.

The various types of headdress shown in the little inset pictures are typical new trends such as are available in shops and specialty departments that cater to seekers of bridal array.

Call for Plaids

Among the definite impressions conveyed by apparel collections in leading couturier salons is that of the importance of handsome plaid wools made up into stunning topcoats or jackets. Paris designers especially favor huge plaids. Per example, Creed designs a multi-color plaid coat with very unusual pockets to replace the handbag as you see here pictured. The tailored sailor by Rose Valois tunes smartly to the chic of this handsome coat. If it is a jacket suit that claims your interest consider it in terms of a handsome plaid wool as pictured at the top. This costume, also a Creed model, achieves perfect ensembling via a multi-colored jacket, a blue pleated skirt and a dark red silk blouse.

PAUL PREACHES THE RISEN CHRIST

LESSON TEXT—Acts 13.16, 23-31, 38-39; I Corinthians 15 19-22.

GOLDEN TEXT—But now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the firstfruits of them that slept.—I Corinthians 15:20.

From time immemorial man has stood questioning at the close of life, somehow feeling that (as Tennyson expressed it)

Thou wilt not leave us in the dust;
Thou madest man, he knows not why;
He thinks he was not made to die:
And thou hast made him; thou art just.

But nowhere in nature was there written the assurance that death did not end all. In fact it was not until Christ won His victory over death that there was any real certainty that there was life beyond the grave.

Christianity is the only faith that rests upon the resurrection of its founder. Other religions point with pride to the monuments at the graves of their founders. Christianity alone presents an empty tomb. Since only God can give life and Jesus by His own power raised Himself from the dead, we have the right to the glorious claim that Christianity is the one true faith—a victorious living faith.

Resurrection truth

I. Makes the Preacher Bold (v. 16).

Barnabas and Paul had been set apart by the Holy Spirit and by the Church for missionary work, and on their first journey had reached Antioch in Pisidia. In the synagogue on the Sabbath day they were asked to speak to the people. Paul arose in holy boldness and called upon them to hearken to him. What is the important message which gives this preacher such assurance? The resurrection of Jesus Christ. It is true that the sermon he gives presents much other information as it logically and tactfully leads up to its high point, but that point is the resurrection and the redemption which it assures.

II. Makes the Gospel Clear (vv. 23-31, 38, 39).

Reviewing Israel's history, Paul declares that of the seed of David God had "according to his promise raised unto Israel a Saviour, Jesus," but that they slew Him. Now, if that were the end, we would indeed be "of all men most miserable" (I Cor. 15:19). Our hopes of salvation, with Israel's hopes, were bound up in Christ. But a dead Christ could save no one, not even Himself. We must have a living Christ. Had Paul's message stopped there it would have been a hollow mockery. But wait, what is it we read? "God raised him from the dead" (v. 30). Blessed truth! Glorious foundation for the proclamation of the gospel so aptly epitomized in the words of verses 38 and 39. Now it is clear that we have a victorious, living Saviour and a gospel to preach that is the "power of God unto salvation to everyone that believeth" (Rom. 1:16).

III. Makes the Future Certain (I Cor. 15:19-22).

Man comes to the years of maturity and suddenly faces the shocking fact that the life to which he gives so much, for which he labors and sacrifices, is but for a brief span of years, perhaps at the most "three score years and ten, and if by reason of strength they be fourscore years, yet is their strength labor and sorrow" (Ps. 90:10). He sees that friends and loved ones must part at the grave. Is this the end?

The answer to that question comes to us today from the empty tomb in the garden through the words of Paul. Listen to their majesty—rejoice in their beauty and assurance: "But now is Christ risen from the dead." Hallelujah! And that's not all, He has "become the first fruits of them that slept" (v. 20), which means that all those who are asleep in Jesus will be brought forth in due season.

The resurrection of Jesus transformed the grave (as a friend of mine expresses it) from a dark hole in the ground where hope ends, to a highway, going down, it is true, through the valley of the shadow, but lighted by the victory of Jesus over death, and bordered on both sides by Easter lilies. Thus is "brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory"—a victory that makes us "steadfast, unmoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord" (I Cor. 15:54, 58). It is Easter. Christ is risen! Let us rejoice!

God's Garden

God Almighty first planted a garden; and indeed it is the purest of human pleasures. It is the greatest refreshment to the spirits of man, without which buildings and palaces are but gross handiworks; and a man shall ever see that, when ages grow to civility and elegancy men come to built stately sooner than to garden finely, as if gardening were the greater perfection. — Francis Bacon.

SAFETY TALKS

'Pedestrian Faults'

THE National Safety council has charged pedestrians with a for traffic accidents that killed 39,- large share of the responsibility 500 persons in 1937. Of this total 15,400 were pedestrians.

In "Accident Facts," a statistical review of 1937, the council said: "Many pedestrians show utter lack of caution in their use of streets and highways. Combined state reports for 1937 show that in 67 per cent of all fatal pedestrian accidents the pedestrian either was violating a traffic law or was acting in an obviously unsafe manner. In non-fatal accidents pedestrian faults appeared in 69 per cent of the cases."

The council described such things as jay-walking, failure to observe traffic lights, drunken walking, walking with instead of against traffic on rural highways, crossing streets in the middle of a block as "pedestrian faults."

Sam Offered Inducement As Well as Guarantee

Sambo wanted to be a junk dealer, but he had no money. So he went to the village banker to see if he could borrow some capital.

The banker listened to the Negro's story and learned that he required $100.

"Don't you think you could manage on less?" asked the banker.

"No, suh," replied Sambo. "A horse and wagon would cost dat."

"Well, I must have some guarantee for the money. What can you offer?"

Sambo thought for a minute.

"Well, suh, Ah could have youah name painted on de wagon."

PATTERN DEPARTMENT SEWING CIRCLE

ISN'T the dress with paneled skirt and lifted waistline (No. 1716) a lovely thing for larger women to wear? It's so simple, so soft and slenderizing, with a bodice that fits perfectly, because the shoulders are shirred and the waistline gathered. Make this of silk crepe, georgette, chiffon or flat crepe. Wear flowers or a jeweled pin at the becoming, deep v-neckline.

For slim figures, the bow-trimmed bolero frock (No. 1705) is particularly flattering, and it's new as tomorrow morning! The dress, even without the bolero, is a real charmer, with its high neckline, flaring skirt and tiny, tiny waist. Tailored enough for daytime, and yet appropriate for afternoon parties, too. Thin wool, flat crepe or silk print are pretty materials for this.

The Patterns.

No. 1716 is designed for sizes 36, 38, 40, 42, 44, 46, 48, 50 and 52. With long sleeves, size 38 requires 5 yards of 39-inch material; with short sleeves, 4⅝ yards.

No. 1705 is designed for sizes 12, 14, 16, 18, 20 and 40. Size 14 requires 4¾ yards of 39-inch material, and 1½ yards of ribbon for bows. To line bolero takes 1⅜ yards.

Put Two Plows Behind the "70" and You Really Cover Ground

Just run down the furrows with an Oliver Row Crop "70" and a 2-base plow. You'll agree that the "70" has everything, does everything and is a beauty for plowing.

It's amazing the ground you cover in a day with "70" power on Tip Toe. Plowing speeds of 3.32 and 4.33 m.p.h., travel speed of 5.88 m.p.h., and remarkable ease and speed of handling add many acres of work in a season. The "70's" quiet, steady 6-cylinder power means you're not worn out from noise, strain and vibration at the end of the day, and with the Oliver Variable Speed Governor Control you only use the fuel needed to do the work.

The Row Crop "70" is built in two engine types for greatest fuel economy: the "70" HC (high compression) for gasoline and the "70" KD for kerosene or distillate. Pick your fuel and your "70". Come in and get demonstration proof that the Oliver "70" is the only truly modern tractor for your farm.

THE REPORT CARD

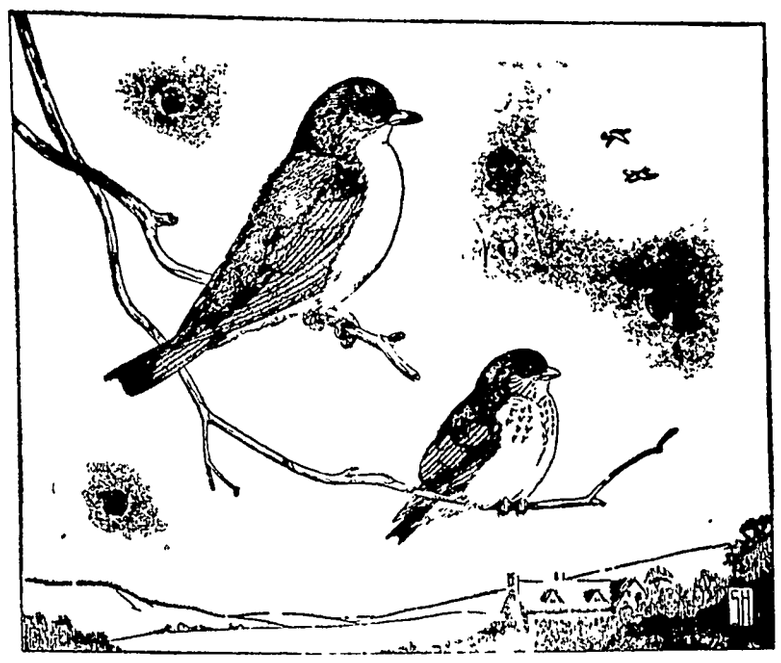
Do you remember or didn't you forget the cold chill your last report card gave you? A report card is as changeable as the wind. Grades turn out to be the converse of all expectations, so expect the worst and work for the best. I believe the grades received will be similar to the effort put forth only to a cartain limit or level. After that what you put forth does not come back in the same proportion as it did before. It must be the law of diminishing returns.

It is true, however, that many of us could put forth a little more effort which would certainly prove to our advantage. The report card is not capable of revealing many things which happen every day in school. The school newspaper should be a valuable source of information for anyone who is interested in what is going on at school.

A report card tells, among other things, how much you are supposed to know. It represents what you have stored above your ears. There is very little chance for practical application of this knowledge until you are out into the world of experience. So I say it is not whether you have all A's on your report card, not how much you know, but rather it is how well you are able to apply what little you do know in a beneficial and practical manner.

Let's hope for the freshmen's sake that the looks of their report cards will not weigh too heavily against them as they are yet in the Christmas spirit, you know, green and in the red. They also saw wood very well during study period. About the time the class bell rings they strike a knot and wake up. But seriously they are a hard working, energetic lot and deserve credit for what they are doing. That which is green is growing, freshmen. You can never be quite sure about a senior. Let's all work a little harder and hope that our next report card will be a better looking specimen.—L. Stille.

THE BLUEBIRD



The Bluebird is our most brightly colored herald of spring. It winters in the southern half of the United States and south to Guatemala and arrives back in March when the soft, sweet warbling of the males may be heard during the early days of spring.

The females begin an early search for a nest, preferring holes in the tops of fence posts Four to six pale blue eggs are laid. The male may help with incubation which lasts about 12 days. The young Bluebirds have speckled breasts and spots on the throat and back

Bluebirds get over half of their diet from such animal matter as beetles, grasshoppers, caterpillars and crickets. Wild fruit, such as elderberries, is taken when insects are scarce.

COLOR DIRECTIONS Bill black: eye brown; chin, head, side and back of neck, back, run p, wings and tail bright blue; throat, breast and sides brownish red, belly white; feet and legs black. Female similar but much duller.

(This material was prepared by Ellis A. Hicks, extension specialist in wildlife, Iowa State College.)

Former Hancock County Resident Died Last Wednesday At Alder, Ia.

BROTHER OF KLEMME LADY DIED WEDNESDAY AT ALDEN

The relatives in Klemme received word Wednesday, April 5th, of the death of Rev. Wm. Suckow of Alden.

Rev. Suckow was born in Albany, New York, and while still a young boy came to Clayton County with his parents and later settled in Hancock County.

When a young man he taught school for a few years and then, after attending college at Galena, Illinois, he was sent out as a minister.

He filled the pulpit in various towns and cities including, Spencer, Fort Dodge, Manchester, Haworden, Forest City, and Alden. He had been in the ministery for 56 years.

His plans were to finish out his eleventh year at Alden in June and then retire. He was very active all his life. His spare time was spent in writing poetry, sermons, and articles, some of which were published in various magazines and leading newspapers.

He leaves to mourn his death his wife, his daughter, Ruth Suckow Nuhn; his sister, Mrs. Edw. J. Schaefer; and two brothers, Ed Suckow of Unionville and Charles of Clarinda; besides many nieces, nephews and friends.

Kitchen Kinks

Baking Ham:-

Take off all the rind and mix one tablespoon of mustard with one cup of vinegar and two cups of water. Pour this in a roaster and lay the ham on it. Bake two hours or until done. Do not soak the ham, as the vinegar draws out the salt and imparts a fine flavor.

Sandwich Fillings:-

Crisp leaf lettuce. Chili sauce mixed with finely chopped celery.

Chopped crisp bacon combined with peanut butter to which a small amount of mayonaise has been added.

Cream of cottage cheese mixed with chopped nuts or ground raisins.

Ground raw carrots with peanuts, moistened with salad dressing.

Quilting Aid:-

Often when quilting a person sticks their finger, and you get some blood on the quilt. The easiest way to remove it, is to place a few thread ravelings in your mouth and chew slightly, then place the moistened ravelings on the spot and press slightly and it will all disappear.

Rinse left-over creamed and buttered vegetables with hot water, placing them in a seive, and then store in an ice refrigerator. This washing removes the butter and cream sauce before it becomes congealed and prepares the vegetables for their second trip to the table as a salad or some new dish.

When you have left-over rice, oatmeal, and other cooked cereals left over, try placing them in a buttered glass and pack firmly. Chill in refrigerator until firm; then unmold, slice and fry in butter. Golden brown, crisp and crunchy, these inexpensive sliced cereals are truly delicious.

ROAST TURKEY NO LONGER IS LIMITED TO HOLIDAY DINNERS

Roast turkey only during the holiday season long has been the American custom, but this is changing, finds A. D. Oderkirk, extension agricultural economist at Iowa State College.

This trend is illustrated by turkey production in Iowa which has shown a 12-fold expansion in the past 10 years. Iowa was fifth in number of turkeys raised last year, producing about 1,386.000 birds valued at $4,714.000, 5 4 per cent of the national total. Iowa was exceeded in turkey production only by Texas, California, Minnesota and Oklahoma.

Iowa is now the fifth state in turkey production, says Oderkirk. Reports show Iowa turkey producers, in common with those over the United States, are increasing their hatches and purchases of poults appreciably this year. A report recently issued by the United States Department of Agriculture indicates that about 27 per cent more turkey poults will be secured in 1939 than last year.

The number of turkey hens reported on hand February 1, shows an increase of 15 per cent over numbers last year for the country as a whole.

No Person Injured In Peculiar Accident South Of Goodell Sunday

Vernon R. Smith, 17, driver and his companion Miss Maxine Armour, 17, both of Clarion were only slightly bruised when they were the principals in a peculiar mishap on Highway 69 about one mile south of Goodell, Sunday afternoon at 5:30 o'clock.

The car in which they were riding left the pavement, struck an embankment with such force that the back end of the car was pitched high into the air and caught in the telephone wires which prevented it from turning over. The car was suspended in the air following the mishap and had to be cut down by telephone linemen.

Another mishap took place at the same point two hours later when a car driven by Wayne Marthinson, 18, of Lake Mills, who was taking Miss Jessie M. Parker to Des Moines, slowed down to view the peculiar sight of the car hanging in the telephone wires. Another car, driven by W. A. Hargrave, of Iowa City, who was following, crashed into the rear end of the Marthinson car. No one was injured.

Klemme Folks Attend Silver Wedding Anniversary

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Sunken of Titonka were surprised at their home Sunday by relatives from far and near who came to help celebrate their Silver Wedding Anniversary. American factories produced enough shoes, boots and slippers in 1938 to give every man, woman and child in the country three pairs, the U. S. Bureau of the Census reported in its latest survey of the industry. Of the total of 390, 746,226 pairs, the major portion—147,754,781—was designed for women. Massachusets, with 76,966,144 pairs, made the most footwear.

Children Made Happy At Easter Egg Frolic

SECOND ANNUAL EASTER EGG HUNT WAS BIG ENTERTAINMENT FOR KIDDIES

A couple of hundred or more children of Klemme and surrounding community took part in the second annual Easter Egg Hunt held Saturday afternoon.

A committee of business men assisted by high school students and Girl Scouts hid the eggs and had charge of the youngsters during the excitement of the hunt. Each child was allowed to find a basketful of eggs and a prize egg, which could be redeemed for candy or a nickel.

The weather was ideal for the hunt and the kiddies had a lot of fun looking for the bright colored eggs which had been prepared by Mrs. E. G. Schaeffer, assisted by her troup of Girl Scouts. Business men of Klemme provided funds for the eggs and prizes.

LARGE CROWD ATTENDED METHODIST CANTATA SUN.

A large crowd attended the Easter Cantata, "Hosanna," which was given by the Klemme Methodist Choir at the Methodist Church Sunday evening.

Many people expressed the opinion that it was one of the best entertainments the choir has ever given. The choir is under the direction of Mrs. Wm. Zabilka. Mrs. E. G. Schaeffer is the pianist and Mrs. Matt Smith is assistant pianist.

Congress Wins Economy Tussle But Finds It Holds Hot Potato

By Joseph W. La Bine

WHEN SOCIAL SECURITY COSTS WENT DOWN

Secretary of the Treasury Henry Morgenthau Jr. (left), as he recommended before the house ways and means committee that a limited old age reserve fund be substituted for social security's controversial $40,000,000,000 "full reserve" plan. At the right is Arthur J. Altmeyer, social security board chairman.

EDITOR'S NOTE—When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of the news analyst, and not necessarily of the newspaper

Congress

U. S. business was pouting genuinely last February when Harry Hopkins made his famous Des Moines speech promising a new administration effort to start the recovery ball rolling. But to business men, recovery was precluded by high relief costs and "exorbitant" taxes. When the administration indicated unwillingness to slash costs, Mr. Hopkins' highly touted "appeasement" plan bogged down and in its place arose the most hostile, economy minded congress President Roosevelt has ever faced.

Many administration leaders, like Secretary Morgenthau and Vice President Garner, are economy bent. Others, like Federal Reserve Chairman Marriner Eccles, a White House favorite, believe government should spend when industry will not, providing a semblance of normalcy. But so unpopular a philosophy bucks the public trend, which is poor politics. A smarter course is to give congress and the nation its economy. If prosperity results, the White House will bask in glory; if it misses fire, the public can be reminded that the White House counseled against it all along.

Whatever the reasoning, a sudden switch in administration attitude has brought new peace to Washington:

Eccles Demarche. Appearing before a special senate silver committee, Mr. Eccles confounded his audience by advocating governmental economy. His reasoning: "While I am convinced that such a policy . . . under present conditions would have disastrous results, we live in a democracy, and, therefore . . . the viewpoint of the majority should promptly be made effective." His suggestion: That federal spending be concentrated on non-competing public activities, i e., buildings, roads, schools, hospitals, housing.

Morgenthau Demarche. Next day Mr. Morgenthau gave administration blessing to congressional plans for postponing scheduled increases in payroll contributions for social security, also endorsing a pay-as-you-go system founded on sound actuarial principles. Present assessments are 1 per cent each against employer and employee. In 1940 and 1941 this would jump to 1½ per cent each; 2 per cent to 1945; 2½ per cent to 1948; 3 per cent each after 1948. Mr. Morgenthau's four alternatives:

(1) One per cent to 1940; 1½ per cent to 1943; 2 per cent to 1946; 2½ per cent to 1949; 3 per cent after that.

(2) Boost from 1 to 1¼ per cent in 1940; to 1½ per cent in 1941; to 1¾ per cent in 1942; present schedule thereafter.

(3) Boost from 1 to 1⅙ per cent in 1940; to 1⅓ per cent in 1941; to 1½ per cent in 1942; present schedule thereafter.

(4) Omit increase to 1½ per cent in 1940; step up rates in 1943 and follow present schedule thereafter.

Morgenthau reasoning: The trend of business conditions in specific future years could not be accurately foreseen in 1935 when social security was started under the present $40,000,000,000 reserve plan. Today it appears a $3,000,000,000 reserve would be sound.

Also recommended was a trustee board to hold social security funds, thereby spiking criticism that the money is now being used to pay governmental expenditures. Under actual operation, payroll contributions now go to the treasury, are shifted to the old-age reserve fund, then invested in treasury securities to bring the cash back to the general fund.

Sour Note. Given a highly coveted concession, congress has found economy is easier to talk about than enforce. Next on the list is the farm appropriations bill, carrying a $250,000,000 item for parity payments which had not been included in the original budget estimate. Farm-state representatives, foreseeing political suicide if parity appropriations were not made, hoped the money might come from a renewal of processing taxes. Industrial-state lawmakers knew their constituents would object. And both groups reflected that less social security income would leave Secretary Morgenthau's cupboard bare.

Pan-America

In early March Brazil's Foreign Minister Oswaldo Aranha arrived at Washington, spent two weeks making friends and returned home with a basketful of plums. In return for liberal U. S. credit allowances to develop Brazilian trade and industry (partly a Pan American defense measure) Senor Aranha agreed to resume payment on Brazilian debts to U. S. bondholders on July 1.

But commitments that were convenient in Washington were hard to repeat when the foreign minister returned to Rio de Janeiro. To pacify hard-pressed Brazilians, the smooth-tongued statesman told his home folks that "I always subordinated that moral obligation of payment to material capacity to do it . . . My theory (in promising payment) was to tranquilize more than half a million holders of our bonds."

Observers have decided Senor Aranha is merely playing a clever game of diplomatic hide and seek. From safely within his own bailiwick he can make pointed inferences that Brazilian bond payments will not be forthcoming as expected unless U. S. tradesmen jump to reduce his nation's large surpluses.

People

Organized, by Mrs. Ken Maynard, estranged wife of the cowboy actor, an escort service to assist inebriated Los Angeles night club guests to their homes.

● Turned religious, Al Capone, former Chicago beer baron now imprisoned at Terminal Island, Calif. When a visiting minister asked prisoners to stand if they "felt the need of the Saviour," Capone was the first to rise.

Europe

Almost forgotten in the heat of European affairs was a prediction that came true: That March would be a crisis month. As March neared its lamb-like end, Reichsfuehrer Adolf Hitler and Premier Benito Mussolini had indeed engineered a crisis and Europe's democracies were found wanting. The blunt fact: For nine days after Germany's Czech conquest, France, Britain, Russia and Poland sought unsuccessfully for solidarity while Hitler made hay in Slovakia, Memel, Lithuania, Belgium and Rumania. The aftermath: Mussolini found courage to cry openly (for the first time) for French concessions. By the month's end it appeared flowers would bloom this April in Europe, for only the remote possibility of French anti-Italian action could mar an otherwise complete Nazi-Fascist victory:

Germany. Of minor importance to jittery London and France are new German treaties handcuffing Slovakia and Lithuania. Of greater interest is the barter treaty with Belgium, an inroad that strikes close to home. But most important is the pact Hitler shoved down the throat of Rumania's King Carol. Its gist: About 90 per cent of Carol's farm products, and most of his 9,000,000-ton annual oil production go to Germany; Rumania is brought politically, militarily and economically into the Reich s orbit by concessions unprecedented in modern economic relations between two sovereign nations. With Hitler apparently headed eastward, Rumania offers an excellent Trojan horse for penetration of the Russian Ukraine. But increasingly remembered is the fact that another empire-bound warrior, Napoleon, met his match in Russia.

Spain. By late March the 32-month civil war had apparently run its full course, ready to end with a Nationalist victory, to be followed by German-Italian domination.

Italy. All that remains to complete totalitarianism's 1939 conquest is French capitulation to Mussolini's Mediterranean demands. No competent observer expects Paris to balk at (1) giving minority rights to Italians in Tunisia; (2) granting Italy a share in administration of the Suez canal, or (3) allowing Italy to control the railroad from French Djibouti to Addis Ababa, Ethiopia's key city. So long as no territorial demands are made, Paris will register nothing more positive than an air of righteousness.

RUMANIA'S KING CAROL

Significance. Europe's future will henceforth be dictated from Rome and Berlin, since democratic solidarity efforts continue to fail. France and England cannot be expected to oppose any dictator conquest short of encroachment on their own territory, and even here they would balk at armed opposition.

Miscellany

Favored, by more congressmen, expansion of the neutrality act's "cash and carry" provision to include sale of munitions to warring nations.

● Commemorated, by a special Irish postal stamp, the 150th anniversary of the American Constitution and George Washington's installation as first U. S. President.

● Offered, by Japan, return of mandated Caroline islands to Germany "as a gesture of good will and an example to other countries holding former German colonies. Stipulation: The islands are to be surrendered when the Reich recovers colonies from Britain and France.

A Frontier Paul Revere

JAMES WATSON WEBB was the famous editor of the New York Courier and Enquirer who also had a career as a politician and diplomat. But he deserves more honor for a daring exploit which he performed as a young man on the Illinois frontier. The scion of an old New York family, Webb ran away from home at the age of 17 and went to Washington where he persuaded John C. Calhoun, secretary of war, to give him a commission in the army.

In October, 1821, young Lieutenant Webb was sent to join the garrison at Fort Dearborn. In the middle of the winter John Kinzie, the Indian agent at Chicago, reported to the commander that the Sioux and Foxe Indians were plotting to surprise and massacre the garrison at Fort Snelling the next spring.

Colonel McNeil immediately called for volunteers to carry the news of the plot to Fort Armstrong (near Rock Island, Ill.) so that word could be sent up the river to Fort Snelling. Lieut. Webb offered to make the journey. Accompanied by a sergeant and a Pottawatomie guide, he set out early in February.

He intended to go first to the post of a French trader on the Rock river and there secure a Winnebago guide. But when he reached the post he found the Winnebagoes holding war dances. So Webb and the sergeant cautiously circled around the camp and headed toward Fort Armstrong.

The weather was bitterly cold and the two men faced the danger of perishing in the raging blizzard. But in spite of this they reached Fort Armstrong in safety. As a result of their trip, the commander at Fort Snelling so reinforced his post that the Indians did not dare attack and a possible massacre was averted.

A Safety-Minded Adventurer

THE Colorado river was referred to as a "mysterious monster" until Maj. J. W. Powell made the first authentic survey of its canyons in 1869. It lured many daring adventurers to their death both before and after his first expedition.

Strangely enough, Powell was a scholar and not an adventurer by purpose. Even when he made his successful journey down the river, it was his methodical preciseness rather than engineering or navigating ability that brought success.

The Colorado descends an average of more than eight feet each mile and makes this drop by a series of rapids. It rages through canyons with perpendicular walls that often tower several thousand feet.

Powell never ran into anything dangerous when he could avoid it. Being a geologist and not a navigator, he beached his boat and sent men along the cataract walls to reconnoiter the rapids ahead before he attempted to descend them. Powell's methods were so successful that he is one of only a few who ever made expeditions down the Colorado without losing a single life.

He traveled the Colorado from the Green river in Wyoming to Virgin canyon below the Grand canyon, bringing back the first authentic information about that natural wonder.

Although he was a professor of geology at Illinois Wesleyan university and had had no navigating experience before his first venture, he designed boats that became models for Colorado river work.

Major Powell was a paradox—a cautious man whose motto was "safety first" and yet he was one of America's greatest adventurers.

'King' Strang

IN 1847 James Jesse Strang—and the first two names are in the proper order!—led a colony from Voree, near LaCrosse, Wis., to the Beaver islands just west of Traverse bay in Lower Michigan. There he set up a "kingdom" over which he ruled with an iron hand. He was a picturesque figure with his flaming whiskers almost as red as the kingly robe he wore.

Not only did he dispense his own cruel brand of justice to the people in his colony but he constantly made war on the Irish fishermen on the mainland and often pillaged their homes. Finally he became so bold that President Fillmore issued a warrant for his arrest on a charge of treason for setting up an independent government within the United States. For some unknown reason he was not found guilty and returned to his "kingdom."

But his downfall was not long in coming. He made a law that all women were to wear short skirts with baggy bloomers. When Mrs. Thomas Bedford refused, her husband was flogged for upholding her refusal. This was a fatal mistake.

For Bedford and another man who had been flogged at the same time, waylaid their hated monarch and shot him. He was taken back to die of his wounds at Voree and the people of his "kingdom" were driven away from their island by the inhabitants of the Michigan mainland.

WHO'S NEWS THIS WEEK

By LEMUEL F. PARTON

NEW YORK.—There is an Anthony Edenish flavor about the way Undersecretary of State Sumner Welles denounces Germany in the absence of Secretary Hull, and there is an Edenish flavor about our Mr. Welles himself. He is tall. He is lean. He has a wee, precise mustache, and why nobody has picked him in a best-dressed poll is a mystery. His long, big nose is perfectly cut, too, and not a hair is out of place in the thinning pompadour that roaches back from a domed forehead.

Our Welles No Flop in Poll of Best Dressers

This is not, however, to hint that the undersecretary is anything less than 100 per cent American. He was born in New York City 46 years or so ago. President Roosevelt's own Groton and Harvard shaped him, and he is at home in four or five clubs that insist on looking up candidates in the Doomsday book of the Revolution of '76. His church, naturally, is the Episcopal church, and his home now is understandably in historic Maryland, where two sons are no doubt also preparing for Groton.

The diplomatic gauntlet that he ran to reach his present post extends back to 1915 and Tokyo. Betimes he has been much in South America. He has been first assistant since 1937 to Secretary Hull.

ONE of Carl Sandburg's songs runs: "I have led a quiet youth, careful of my morals; I shall have an old age full of vice and quarrels." So it goes with Walter Brennan, making a distinguished film career playing likable old reprobates. Hollywood pegs him as the successor to Will Rogers, and four Rogers pictures are being readied for him.

Youth in Peace And Quiet; Now In Rum and Riot

He is a personable young man of 40, but, in "Barbary Coast," "Kentucky," and such earlier films as "Smilin' Guns" and "The Lariat Kid," he came through handsomely as a tough old-timer, and now that's his ticket. He likes it, and, living these roles, becomes a sage, homespun old codger given to offhand, David Harum aphorisms. I have heard of similar occupational trends in Hollywood. He says he is growing old happily.

He first upped himself as an oldster by lying about his age to get in the war. Gassed in France, he lost all his teeth and got a rasp in his voice, which also helped. He raised pineapples in Guatemala, made money, lost it in Los Angeles real estate, and then crashed the films. Born and reared in Swampscott, Mass., he is a master of the quaint western and southwestern idiom.

WHEN this writer was doing a short turn helping build the Panama canal, he fell in with a Jamaica Negro water boy, a sort of Gunga Din of a squad of Paraiso swampers, who was worried about the canal being too narrow. In the quaint lingo of the British-taught island Negroes, he used to say:

F. J. Taylor Has Jamaica Boy's Idea of Canal

"Yes bahs, ships grow hugely in coming years and if some is fighting ship it must go swiftly and not fear other passing great ship. Axing parding sir, we Jamaica boys say canal need great enlarging."

Frank J. Taylor, president of the American Merchant marine, returns from the canal to New York with the same idea. He says congress should spend $300,000,000 to widen the canal for both commercial and national defense reasons. Mr. Taylor's career is Brooklyn's favorite "boy who made good" story—from $1 a day to $35,000 a year, which is the possibly vulgar epitome of suoh careers in this day and age.

He was an orphan lad in a Manhattan slum, at work at 12 as an apprentice at Robbins dry dock in the Red Hook section of Brooklyn. He rose in politics, in the state assembly for 12 terms, sheriff, commissioner of records, welfare commissioner and comptroller of New York City.

Retiring from the last office in 1937, he went to Florida, but the steamship owners tracked him down and burdened him with this $35,000 job. He fights government intrusion on private enterprise, but says the shipping interests will co-operate effectively with the United States maritime commission.

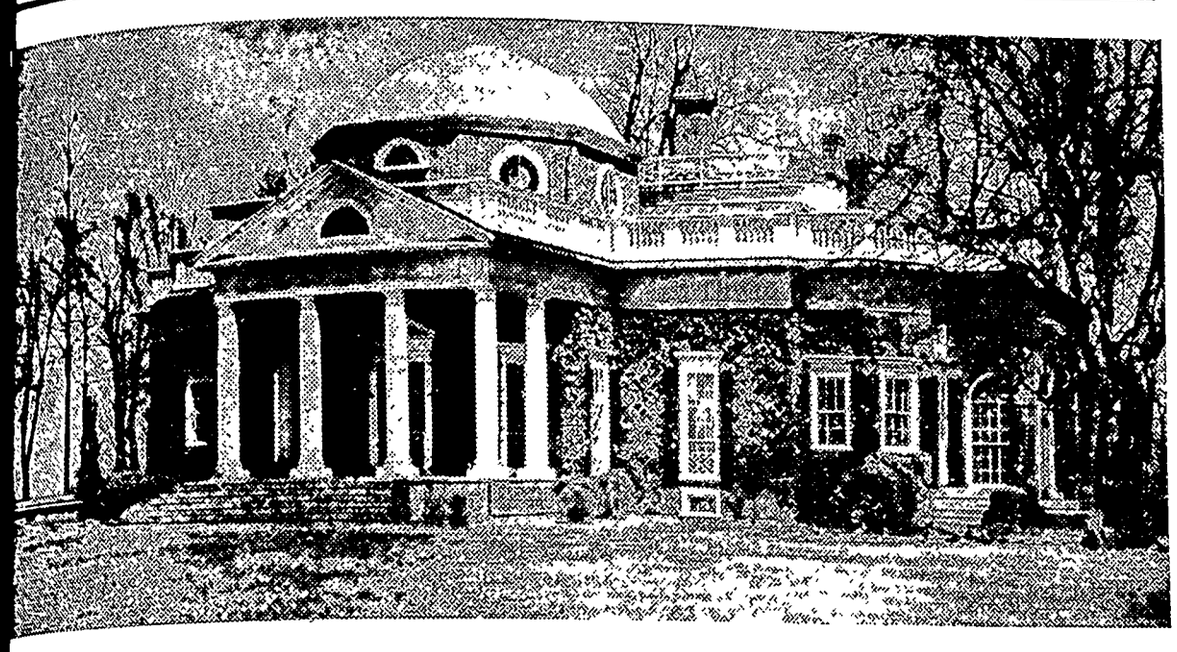
estoration of the Garden at Monticello, Thomas Jefferson's Home, Will Begin This Spring



Monticello, the home of Thomas Jefferson, third President of the United States.

ELMO SCOTT WATSON
© Western Newspaper Union.

HERE'S a new "resto- ration" program on in Virginia. This time it is an entire town, as was at Williamsburg, his- Colonial capital, nor a ding, as was the case of law office of James Mon- at Fredericksburg, but it one the less interesting t is to be done at one of great patriotic shrines of erica — Monticello, near rlottesville, the home of mas Jefferson, author of Declaration of Independ- and third President of United States.

e restoration at Monticello is of Jefferson's garden which since disappeared and it will ade possible through the re- ence of Garden week in Vir- , when more than a hundred ous estates, most of which privately owned, are opened e public by their owners.

e week of April 24 has been side for this event, which is under the auspices of the den Club of Virginia, the or- ization that is sponsoring the oration of the Monticello gar-

Each year thousands of den lovers from every part of erica flock to Virginia for the den week event, when the ial gardens not open to the lic at any other time are wn by their owners. A small is collected and this money s to the restoration fund of Garden club.

he plan to restore Jefferson's den at Monticello came about this way: Fiske Kimball, au- rity on early American archi- ture, unearthed the original fferson drawings, now pre- rved in the Coolidge collection the Massachusetts Historical iety, while serving on the res- ation committee of the Thom- Jefferson Memorial Founda- n, owners of Monticello. Over long period of years the com- ittee, consisting of Dr. Edwin Betts, professor of botany at University of Virginia, and nsidered the foremost author- on Thomas Jefferson as a tanist; Milton L. Grigg, Char- tesville architect; R. T. Halsey the Metropolitan museum, New rk, and Dr. Charles Moore of Fine Arts commission of shington have been aiding Mr. mball put together the informa- n essential for the restoration. Due to the meticulous notes d drawings of every detail of fferson's full life and its work, earthed by various researchers d fitted into the restoration pat- rn, the committee announced cently that it is now prepared embark on "the most faithfully curate restoration possible in merica."

Drawings for the garden res- ration and the research still sential is being carried on by rigg & Johnson, Charlottesville chitects. Execution of the work to be under the direction of rs. Allen Perkins of Charlottes- lle, former president of the Gar- den Club of Virginia, and Mrs. Delos Kidder.

The restored Jefferson garden will include some three acres known to the committee as the east garden and will include replacement of all the trees known during Jefferson's lifetime.

Plans call for long elliptical paths, bordered with plantings of native wild flowers and evergreens, because Jefferson was interested in determining the decorative possibilities of using wild materials which he considered more beautiful than formal arrangements usually found in the pretentious gardens of Virginia.

One of the most interesting features of the restoration will be the replacement of the two fish ponds, small oval pools, the size of which Jefferson carefully computed on the basis of the average annual rainfall and the amount of water which this would yield to keep his fish in fresh water.

In carrying out the research it was found that Jefferson wrote in praise of the splendid ideas for garden development in a now rare volume published by Thomas Whatly in London in 1777. A copy of this volume was secured and it was found that the garden as executed at Monticello was described in almost minute detail, the description apparently influencing Jefferson so favorably that he adopted most of Whatly's recommendations for what was considered the ideal garden.

Among all the homes of great Americans which have been preserved as historic shrines, Monticello is unique. It not only reflects the personality of the man who lived in it and loved it so much but it is a monument which Thomas Jefferson literally erected to himself. He himself selected its site—a wooded peak at which he, as a young man, gazed long and often across the Rivanna river from his boyhood home at Shadwell. He determined to establish his home on the "Little Mountain" some day.

Upon the death of his father he inherited the landed estate which lay along both sides of the Rivanna river and in 1770 he began clearing the summit and preparing for building. But there was much to do before actual construction could be begun. The whole apex of the mountain had to be removed. When this was done there was left an eliptical plane upon which the buildings were to be located. The place was named Monticello, meaning in Italian, "Little Mountain."

In the fall of 1770, the dwelling at Shadwell burned, so that building began in earnest at Monticello, beginning the establishment of an entirely new homestead upon this wild and almost inaccessible site. But true to his vision, the owner ignored the much easier and cheaper process of replacing the old dwelling where were still the other numerous buildings that were then essential to a plantation—barns, mills, slave quarters and storage houses of many kinds.

Self Made Architect

At that time there were virtually no architects in the country and few skilled workers in the building crafts. So Jefferson took up the study of architecture and architectural drawing. Guided by his inherent appreciation of the essential elements of fine construction, he taught himself so well that he became his country's outstanding architect of the period. He made vast numbers of drawings for his home and worked out the last details for every part of the structure.

More than that, he selected the stone and timber used in the structure, looked after the construction of the brick and the nails made by his own servants, devised advanced and ingenious contrivances for comfort and convenience, designed the decoration of the interior and personally selected the furnishings and ornaments. He not only planned but gave personal supervision to the laying out of the various buildings on the estate, the gardens, the walks and the roadways.

Though architecture was only a hobby with Jefferson, today he is acclaimed a great architect.

The exterior of Monticello is in the Doric order of architecture. The interior is in the Ionic style. A portico, the full height of the house, with stone pillars and steps projects 25 feet. It is a brick mansion 100 by 100 feet, with white pillars, cornices and balustrades surmounted by a dome, standing in the midst of a lawn overlooking river, woodlands and fertile valley, with a view of mountains to the west and of long extending coastal plains to the east.

Hidden Staircases.

The appearance is of one story and entering the hall one is still deceived, for Jefferson disliked staircases to such an extent that he shut them all up in closets. The hall shows only a gallery on which the bedrooms open. In the dome itself Jefferson planned a billiard room, but a law was passed by the state before it was completed, forbidding the game and so it was left in an unfinished state. The wings of the house end in octagonal projections; the northern one containing the dining room, tea room and two guest rooms, the southern forming Jefferson's private suite, sitting room, library and bedroom. Under the dome on the west is the great drawing room, famous for its parquette flooring of native woods and its pillared portico.

Most notable of the architectural features of the house is the hiding away of all signs of kitchen, laundry, stable and the many workshops necessary on a plantation of that period when almost every article in daily use was manufactured on the estate by servants and slaves. The sharp declivity of the mountain made it possible to have these offices all at a lower level than the house.

A tunnel from the basement leads right and left to one-story pavilions, used by the slaves. By this contrivance dishwashers, cooks, butlers, maids, troops of slaves with wood for fires, cans of ashes, pails of hot or cold water did their work without disturbing the tranquillity of the family and their guests. An oddity contrived by Jefferson is a dumbwaiter for hoisting wine from the cellar, with a capacity of but one bottle.

Monticello, undoubtedly the finest mansion in that section of Virginia, cost its owner, according to his account books, about $7,200. The ornamental stone was brought from Philadelphia to Richmond by water and hauled from Richmond in carts.

A Herd of Pigs 'Saw America First' When They 'Toured' With De Soto 400 Years Ago

Four hundred years ago this year a herd of pigs went on a "See America First" tour. Unlike later tourists who go because they want to, these early "tourists" went because they had to. They were driven and they probably went none too willingly. Be that as it may, the record of their cross-country journey from the Everglades in Florida to the Ozarks in Arkansas, through a thousand wild and hostile miles of forest, prairie, mountain, flood, swamp, snow and summer heat, is one of the most amazing in American history.

In 1539 Hernando De Soto, who had been made governor of Cuba so that he might use that island as a base of operations in conquering and colonizing Florida, arrived in Tampa bay with nine vessels. On board were 600-odd soldiers, 350 horses and 13 hogs, the latter being for the use of the colonists he planned to establish on the Florida peninsula or beyond.

Heading northward from the bay, De Soto's expedition marched slowly onward in an amazing arc of zigzags which resulted in its touching at least seven and perhaps 11 of our present southern states, traversing mountains and the great Mississippi river, before the weary survivors, riding in boats of their own wilderness manufacture, and clad principally in the skins of wild animals, were finally to reach safety in Mexico four years later.

An Amazing Sight.

At the start of the expedition in Florida and Georgia, apparently on into both the Carolinas, and seemingly over the mountains to somewhere near Chattanooga, the moving column must have been an amazing sight. First came the armored cavalry in its glittering splendor; behind limped the infantry, sore alike from battles and blisters; while somewhere between or around the two scampered a squealing, reluctant treasure of pork—the rapidly multiplying herd of hogs —and its herders. And from the hilltops and forests along the way peered savage eyes that had never before beheld horses, or pigs, or firearms, or white skins, and that sometimes visioned the rider and his horse together as a single shining animal.

Sometimes the party was well fed by friendly or frightened Indians; sometimes it was half-starved — one such occasion, seemingly somewhere in Georgia, finally compelling apparently the first dressing and serving of pork in the present continental area of the United States (1540). Even then, however, each man was allowed only half a pound of meat per day, to sustain him until more grain, nuts, or roots were found; for in general the rapidly growing reserve of pork was still being saved, "with infinite labor," for the colony that De Soto hoped eventually to found.

From the Chattanooga region the expedition apparently marched southwest into central Alabama; then northwestward across the state of Mississippi. In each of these sections a desperate battle was fought with the red men, whose teeming straw village the Spaniards set afire in each case (winter of 1540-41); but in the end the invaders lost in the flames not only a collection of pearls, the only riches so far obtainable, but also most of their ammunition, saddles, and clothing, and many horses, and all but 100 of the hogs (the herd had recently numbered 500).

After a 30-day delay for building boats to cross the Mississippi, the expedition began a year of wandering in Arkansas (perhaps entering Missouri and Oklahoma, too), finally returning to the banks of the Mississippi with the plan of building ships to return to Cuba for reinforcements. Here De Soto died, however (May, 1542; three years after the landing at Tampa); and the hog herd, now increased to 700, was auctioned off among his men, who thus ate pork much more often, but started observing religious holidays!

De Soto's successor, Moscoso, at first abandoned the plan of a voyage by sea in favor of the supposedly easier land march to New Spain (Mexico). The summer was, therefore, spent in a westward trek which apparently reached halfway across northern Texas. But the approach of autumn on the seemingly limitless Texas plains sent them trudging back to the Mississippi to begin building ships. They used the shawls of the Indian women for sails, and turned into spikes and anchors their firearms, their captives' chains, and such bits and stirrups as remained. The remaining hogs and most of the surviving horses were turned into meat for the voyage.

HERNANDO DE SOTO

After a desperate 16-day battle with hostile river Indians in their much swifter canoes, and after six weeks of feeling their way around the Texas coast, 311 hairy beings clothed and shod in deerskin and claiming once to have been Spaniards reached the shelter and welcome of a Spanish settlement on the Panuco river near the site of modern Tampico.

C. Houston Goudiss Offers Practical Help in Planning Meals That Avoid Hidden Hunger; Illustrates Right and Wrong Methods of Menu Building

By C. HOUSTON GOUDISS

A GENERATION ago, homemakers approached the problem of feeding their families with but two objectives: to put weight on their children and to send adults away from the table with their appetites appeased. If the child failed to gain satisfactorily, or if his teeth were crowded and subject to decay, he was said to "take after his Uncle Abner" or perhaps to have inherited the poor teeth of his maternal grandmother. And if adults were chronically tired or suffered from "nerves," that, too, was blamed on circumstances that had nothing to do with the diet.

No one had ever heard of hidden hunger! For nutritionists had not yet startled the world by demonstrating that food may satisfy the appetite and yet fail to feed . . . that the absence of minute amounts of minerals and vitamins may be responsible for a long train of deficiency diseases which cause untold misery and are responsible for mental and physical inefficiency.

Planning Meals Scientifically

Today we know that a definite relationship exists between food consumption and bodily activity, and that normal individuals can usually control body weight by regulating the amount of fuel foods in the diet. We know that minerals and vitamins play a powerful part in building and maintaining sound teeth as well as healthy nerves; and that we can build resistance to disease, defer old age, and even lengthen the span of life by choosing our food, not merely for its appetite appeal, but for the qualities that contribute toward what nutritionists term a balanced diet.

The Balanced Diet

Every modern homemaker therefore owes it to her family not to plan meals at random, but to take into consideration the seven factors that science has determined to be essential for top health. These include: protein for building and repairing body tissue; carbohydrates to produce quick heat and energy; fats, a more compact form of fuel; minerals, which serve both as builders, and as regulators of body processes; vitamins A, B, C, D, E and G, which act as regulators, and help to prevent the various deficiency diseases; water, which serves as a vehicle by which food is carried to the tissues, and cellulose or bulk, required for the normal functioning of the intestinal tract.

A Day's Food Plan

The various food essentials will be supplied if the three daily meals include a quart of milk for every child, a pint for each adult, which may be served as a beverage, with cereals, in soups, sauces or made into desserts; an egg daily, or at least three or four weekly; one serving of meat, fish or chicken, usually at the main meal of the day; a second protein food, such as cheese, baked beans or nuts, usually served at lunch or supper; two vegetables besides potatoes, one of which should be of the raw, leafy variety; two servings of fruit, and at least one serving of a whole grain cereal.

By adhering to this plan, you will help to supply your family with the necessary proteins, minerals, vitamins and cellulose. Fuel foods may be added by way of breadstuffs, macaroni, rice and other cereals; butter or margarine and the fats used in cooking.

Common Errors in Menu Planning

Common mistakes in menu planning are a concentration of too many proteins or carbohydrates in one meal; the failure to include adequate bulk by way of fruits, vegetables and whole grain cereals; and the massing in one meal of too many foods that are high in fat.

The following menu, for example, contains more protein than necessary, and too little bulk, yet it is typical of the dinners served in many homes: Hamburger Steak, Baked Beans, Potatoes, Stewed Corn, Custard Pie.

Since both meat and baked beans are rich in protein, they may well be served at separate meals, as indicated by either of the following combinations: Hamburger Steak, Creamed Potatoes, String Beans, Lettuce Salad, Fresh or Cooked Fruit. Or, Baked Beans, Stewed Tomatoes, Cabbage Salad, Custard Pie.

In the first menu, the beans, potatoes, corn and pastry are all high carbohydrate foods. To provide additional bulk, as well as to reduce the amount of carbohydrate, it would be advisable to serve a green vegetable such as string beans, and choose fruit instead of pie for dessert. It is assumed, of course, that eggs would be given in some other form during the day.

Since baked beans contain both protein and carbohydrate, we omit potatoes in the third menu, and serve a food rich in vitamin C—the tomatoes, and add a bulky raw vegetable by way of the salad.

It's Balance That Counts

It requires no more time or effort to prepare nutritionally correct meals than those which lack balance, nor is it more expensive. For elaborate meals can lack balance, if they are deficient in minerals, vitamins and bulk, while those composed of such simple foods as bread and milk, and stewed fruits may provide an abundance of the protective substances which satisfy the hidden hunger of the body.

My plea to homemakers is to give less thought to the preparation of elaborate recipes, and more thought to supplying the food values that will create abundant health and vitality. In that way, I believe we shall take a real step forward in human progress.

Mrs. T. L. D.—The alkaline or base-forming foods include vegetables, most fruits, nuts and milk. Among the foods which have been found particularly effective as body alkalinizers are bananas, apples, oranges, dried beans and potatoes.

AS WE GO ON OUR WAY

School life has almost come to an end for may Seniors. We will then be confronted with choosing a vocation, which often is difficult to decide upon It should be something that we are suited for or it doesn't always work out so well Many times this is learned from experience

School takes up the best part of our lives. While there, we have a chance to study (it is funny how we hate to) and learn the things that make our world better The Seniors have their pictures taken, skip day, graduation and parties during the year.

When through school, things change quite a bit Problems arise. and bad luck as well as good luck comes. Perhaps we aren't ready for hard knocks. It isn't the hard times coming, it's the good times going—Doris.

AROUND K. H. S. ASSEMBLY

The Junior class was well represented at the Music Contest last week Elsie Ward got a division one on her trombone solo, which means she will go to the District Contest.

Elsie T. and Howard S both brought home a division two on their vocal solos.

The Home Ec I girls like to talk while they sew, and one day some of them got to boasting about how quickly they could get their chores done at home. Phyllis S. said she got done at four-thirty, because she had only one chicken to feed.

Phyllis Swanson returned from Florida and started school last Monday morning. We are very glad to have her back.

Marie Schmidt, in typing class Wednesday, set another new record She typed 47 words a minute, with no mistakes on a ten minute speed test. She hopes to make fifty before the year is up.

The music contest is over, and we can well be proud of the results. We received two division I ratings. Elsie Ward received this superior rating on her trombone solo, while Irene Becker rated division one on her marimba solo.

All of the other groups made a very good showing Six numbers from here rated a division II ranking. They were: band, girls' sextet, clarinet quartet, brass quintet, Howard's tenor solo, and Elsie Thiemann's mezzo soprano solo.

BLOW 'EM UP and BUST 'EM NEWS of the WEEK by BARSWICK

We wonder why so many Seniors are continually "yawning" every morning. Could it be that they don't go home right after play practice?

Allen B. and Keith S. are afraid of getting the hot seat over the demerit system. I believe the boys are running out of arguments.

This week we continue with the letters of the alphabet.

G is for Galbreth, who coaches the grades. If he can't change "Corrigan" Grosshuesch, he'll learn another trade.

H is for Harold Swalve. If it wasn't for water, he would be sure to dissolve.

I is for Irene, a stately brunette. She doesn't like the idea of being teacher's pet.

J is for Johnson, sometimes called "Fat." If anyone sasses him, he sasses right back.

K is for Keith, the algebra wizard. He copies Barz's papers when he gets in a blizzard.

L is for Lorraine, from the Girl Scout Troop. Boy! We give them all a big salute.

M is for Marian, a very nice blonde. She used to like Cedar Falls, but now that's passed on.

GRADES 1 & 2 & KINDERGARTEN

Luella and Richard Kaduce got A in spelling every day this week.

The first graders finished reading their books on Friday and have new books now. Merlin's group is reading "Elson, Book One," and Roger's group is reading "Everyday Life, Book One."

Isabelle and Luella brought plants to school last week.

The Easter Bunny came to our room on Friday. Before we went out for recess we made nests and when we came in they were filled

On Thursday we made Easter baskets for our mothers.

These children have been neither absent nor tardy during the last six weeks period: Willis Bock, Richard Tiggeman, and Iris Rosendahl.

GRADES 3 & 4

Richard Deninger is a new pupil in the fourth grade. He moved here from Holland, Iowa. We now have thirteen in the fourth grade.

The third and fourth grade boys treated the girls to some Easter candy on Thursday. This was to pay for the party that the girls gave the boys on Valentine's day

We are making booklets in the third grade which show the different kinds of clothing.

GRADES 7 & 8

Tuesday we went on a field trip in search of rocks for our science class. We went to Johnson's Hills Everyone brought back rocks to identify. Wednesday we identified limestone, shale, sedimentary rocks and fire stone.

Corrine Merkel brought a star rock from a cave she had visited, a piece of petrified wood, and a rock from a gold mine. We also have a rock from a gypsum mine near Fort Dodge.

Julia Bell and Freda Kaduce received 100 per cent in spelling.

Wednesday the Klemme Grade Team went to Thornton to play in the tournament. They defeated Clear Lake in two over time periods, 13 to 12.

Robert Kimball, Edward Peck, Caroline Schwartz, Elwyn Jacobs, Phyllis Klotzbach and Nadine Kimball were neither absent or tardy this past six weeks.

As to the new plaids, stripes and checks they play havoc with any tradition that a suit or coat is supposed to be modest and conservative.

Suits of checked, striped or plaided woolens have revolutionized the mode in that they are a far departure from the classic navy or black monotones of yore. The fact that the plaid skirts are pleated also gives them the spring "look." See the nifty plaid suit to the right in the illustration. It typifies the new trend perfectly. It is of imported tweed in soft yellow with crossbar of brown (smart color combination this season). The pleated skirt stamps this suit with unmistakable chic. The pleats are stitched down around the hips for smooth slenderizing line. The single-breasted jacket observes every rule of the game in matter of swank detail. Brown suede sports hat with a wide scoop brim and brown alligator bag bespeak utmost chic.

As to the fetching little dressmaker jacket suit it is with us in such numbers it would take an alert mind to keep tally of the number that pass a given moment at a given point, for the jacket suit is omnipresent in the style parade. The new jacket twosomes play up color combinations in amazing variations. Black wool crepe for the skirt topped with jacket in pale yellow with black piping describes the goodlooking model centered in the group. New details are the softly rolled collar, high pockets and outside tucks around the waist. A wide brimmed Breton sailor with a quill across the crown is jaunty and very flattering to the wearer.

Of Silk Shirting

It's your play! And why not play in a sports dress of purple silk shirting striped in white, with self-color simulated reptile belt, as here pictured? Speaking of silk for sports frocks, here's another suggestion. If you select a dress of dull-surfaced nubby silk noil, in the new olive green and off-white color, you will be all set. Complement this with a separate lumber jacket top.

PAUL ESTABLISHES CHURCHES

LESSON TEXT—Acts 14:1-7, 19-23.

GOLDEN TEXT—According to the grace of God which is given unto me, as a wise masterbuilder, I have laid the foundation, and another buildeth thereon. But let every man take heed how he buildeth thereupon. —I Corinthians 3:10.

"Onward, Christian soldiers," says the well-known hymn, thus expressing the truth that Christianity is engaged in a relentless warfare against the world, the flesh, and the devil. Those who conceive of their relationship to the church as a convenient and comfortable social arrangement, with a bit of spiritual flavor but no responsibility, have none of the Spirit of Christ, or of His bondservant Paul, whose life we are now studying. Phillips Brooks was right when he said, "If Christian faith does not culminate in the effort to make Christ known to all the world, that faith appears to me to be a thoroughly unreal and insignificant thing, destitute of power, and incapable of being convincingly proved to be true."

The constraining love of Christ sent Paul and his co-workers pressing on from Cyprus to Antioch in Pisidia, to Iconium, to Lystra, and to Derbe. Joy and sorrow, fellowship and hatred came and went, but the witness for Christ went on. Our lesson can best be considered as a study in contrasts.

I. Belief and Unbelief (vv. 1, 2).

"Multitudes both of the Jews and . . . Greeks believed." What joy that must have brought to the preacher. "Unbelieving Jews" and Gentiles with "minds evil affected" —how sad such a result made Paul's heart. The same division prevails today. There are only two kinds of people in the world, the believer and the unbeliever.

II. Popularity and Persecution (v. 4).

"The multitude was divided," Paul knew all about that, so does every faithful teacher and preacher of the gospel. Paul and Barnabas were thus made ready for the experience which they were to have at Lystra where the healing of the crippled man first brought them worship as gods, and then bitter persecution. Few temptations are more appealing to the Christian worker than popularity, and possibly none is more treacherous. Let us labor to please God, not men, and when men give us false acclaim let us like Paul urge them to "turn from these vanities to the living God" (v. 15).

III. Boldness and Caution (vv. 3, 5, 6).

The persecution at Iconium only made the messengers bold in their purpose to stay on (v. 3), giving testimony to God's grace. The Christian worker need not be afraid of the devices of evil men so long as God leads him to stand his ground. Christian testimony calls for courage! But wait, in verses 5 and 6 we find the preachers fleeing to another city. Is their courage gone? No. They are exercising God-given judgment and caution. "Sometimes it is needful to fling away your life for Jesus; but if it can be preserved without shirking duty it is better to flee than to die . . . A voluntary martyr is a suicide . . . Heroic prudence should ever accompany a trustful daring, and both are best learned in communion with Jesus" (Alexander Maclaren).

IV. Death and Life (vv. 19, 20).

The persecution at Lystra culminated in the stoning of Paul and his being left for dead. Some believe that he really died and had the glorious experience recorded in II Corinthians 12:2-5 before he was raised by God from the dead. Be that as it may, God miraculously brought the dead or apparently dead man to full life and vigor, and on he went to the city of Derbe. Those of us who belong to Christ and serve Him should recognize that our very lives are in His blessed hand. Our purpose should be to glorify Him, whether by life or by death.

V. Advance and Return (vv. 21-23).

The work of God is not completed by the pioneering forward thrust into the strongholds of Satan. That work is necessary, and just now men are desperately needed to do such work in heathen lands. Women shame the men by their willingness to go where missionary boards can only send men, who are all too often lacking.

On the other hand, there is no more important work than that of confirming and establishing new Christians in their faith. Paul and Barnabas were not making a retreat. They were courageously returning to the stoning and the hatred of the cities they had served in order to give counsel and encouragement to the believers. Note that they ordained elders, evidently consummating some form of church organization. Sometimes one becomes so tired of intricate church machinery that the tendency is to wish there were none at all, but here again we need to be balanced in our thinking and acting.

TIPS to Gardeners

Helping Seeds Along

THE first step toward insuring germination of seeds is proper planting. In exceptionally dry weather, however, even properly planted seeds may not germinate. It is advisable in such a case to prepare the dry soil for the seed. Water freely, as though you had a crop growing. Allow the water to soak in and when the soil has good moisture content, begin your planting. You must be careful, of course, not to plant in wet, muddy soil.

Excessive rainfall, on the other hand, may make the soil so moist as to cause rotting of planted seeds. If they have not germinated within a reasonable length of time after planting, a few of them should be dug up and examined. If rotting is indicated, another planting must be made.

While few vegetable seeds require special treatment to assist germination, numerous flower seeds can successfully be treated, according to Gilbert Bentley, flower expert of the Ferry Seed Breeding Station.

He advises as follows: Nick the seed coat of lupin, moonflower and morning glory; remove the rough outer coating of nasturtium, momordica, castor bean and sand verbena; soak canna, lily, job's tear and sweet pea seeds in water for 12 hours before planting.

Reproach of Heart

A man's first care should be to avoid the reproaches of his own heart; his next, to escape the censures of the world.—Addison.

HOW TO SEW

by Ruth Wyeth Spears

Embroidery by Mary Ann, age nine.

MARY ANN was named for her grandmother, who at the age of nine, made an elaborate sampler of embroidery stitches. Everyone thought it would be nice if the modern Mary Ann could also do a bit of hand work to be framed and kept. We here report, thanks to a series of rainy afternoons, this was actually accomplished.

Mary Ann's mother started the project with a rather large piece of blue gingham; a pair of embroidery hoops and some odds and ends of bright six strand mercerized embroidery thread. Outlines for flower designs were made by drawing around coins and the flowers were embroidered as shown here. Stems were done in outline stitch and leaves in groups of straight stitches.

From the many attempts on that piece of gingham, two flower groups had almost as much life and charm as the modern Mary Ann, age nine. These were neatly framed and lend a gay note at each side of an old mirror.

NOTE: Book 1, Gifts, Novelties and Embroidery, gives full instructions for ninety embroidery stitches with many sketches showing ways to use them. You and your children may have happy hours with this fascinating hand work. Book 1, SEWING, for the Home Decorator, contains 48 complete lessons for making slipcovers, draperies, bedspreads and many other things for the house. Books are 25 cents each. If you order both books, crazypatch leaflet, reviving interest in this old-time hand craft, is included FREE. Address, Mrs. Spears, 210 S. Desplaines St., Chicago, Ill.

SAFETY-TALKS

Like the Chicken, We—

IT BEGINS to look as though maybe we humans are second cousins to the chickens when it comes to crossing the road.

Of 7,250 pedestrians killed during 1937 in traffic accidents that occurred in cities, says the National Safety council, in its 1938 edition of "Accident Facts," 85 per cent were struck while crossing the road.

About 2,900 persons were injured fatally while crossing a street somewhere BETWEEN intersections. Approximately 3,260 met their death at intersections. Either they were crossing the intersection with the traffic signal, against the signal, diagonally, or were crossing an intersection at which there was no traffic signal. Deadly and tragic work at the crossroads!

German 'Encirclement' Rushed But Poland Fears Firm Stand

By Joseph W. La Bine

EDITOR'S NOTE—When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of the news analyst, and not necessarily of the newspaper.

Europe

"The regime of pre-war days had but one fault—it knew the devilish plan of encircling and attacking us, yet it lacked the power or will to ward it off . . . No power in the world can ever again force us to our knees."

Thus spoke Adolf Hitler at Wilhelmshaven, one day after Britain's Prime Minister Chamberlain had shocked the world by promising to defend Poland against Nazi aggression. Though Der Fuehrer barked boldly, it appeared the heretofore ineffectual Stop Hitler drive had at last taken small roots, and that Germany was indeed being encircled.

POLAND'S JOSEF BECK

Outside of Russia, which still scoffs at French-British solidarity efforts, Rumania and Poland are eastern Europe's principal anti-Nazi frontiers. Even as Mr. Chamberlain announced the new Polish guarantee, France was busying herself with Rumania. In Paris the French agreed to double their purchase of Rumanian oil and slash 60 per cent off import duties on Rumanian farm products. Thus will King Carol's Bucharest government be protected from complete economic overlordship under the new trade treaty forced by Germany.

Within a few more days other results appeared. Rumania and Poland, with French-British blessing, reportedly renovated their two-power military alliance to make it operative against Germany as well as Soviet Russia. At the same time Britain apparently extended border guarantees to Rumania.

There was good likelihood, however, that scoffing Russia might be right. En route to London for a three-day conference, Poland's Foreign Minister Josef Beck found a chilly reception in Berlin, which probably made him acutely aware that he must make no rash commitments to the British. After straddling the political fence for years, Poland had its choice between mercy at the hands of Germany or a "security" with France and Britain, the latter meaning little in the light of Czecho-Slovakia's experience.

A good sign of Polish thought was the comment in Kurjer Poranny, semi-official newspaper: "There is no alliance or bloc . . . the British commitments are not in contradiction to nonaggression treaties signed by Poland with Germany and Russia . . . Poland always tries to conform not only to the formal side of these treaties but also to their spirit.

Asia

For almost a year Japanese aggression against French-British colonial interests has followed on the heels of European dictator coups. With London and Paris jittery after Munich, Tokyo walked into Canton. On February 10, just after Italian troops helped General Franco capture Barcelona and put democracies on the run again, Japan occupied strategic Hainan island which was smack in the middle of the French-British sphere of interest. Moreover, the seizure defied an earlier agreement with France.

With France and Britain again jittery in the wake of Hitler's Czech and Memel conquests, Japan has struck again. The victim: France, who in 1933 laid formal claim to the seven Spratly islands lying 350 miles southwest of the American Philippines, 350 miles west of British Borneo and 350 miles east of French Indo-China.

Though discovered in 1867, the islands went unclaimed until France's declaration of sovereignty. Useful economically only for phosphate, the Spratly group offers Japan a snug haven for seaplanes and submarines which might disrupt French-British-U. S. trade. At Tokyo the foreign office pointed out that Japs have worked Spratly phosphates since 1917, investing capital and establishing small settlements. But since France neglected to establish administrative jurisdiction (a grave oversight) Japan decided to claim the reefs "to eliminate disadvantages and inconveniences."

The expected result of France's protest: Nothing.

Spain

Though recognition by the United States again placed Gen. Francisco Franco's Spain in the good graces of international society (all other major powers had previously recognized the Nationalist government) the war-torn Iberian peninsula still faces a tremendous task. Franco's sole ineffectual international gesture as a European power has been to join Germany, Italy and Japan in the anti-Communist pact. Having thus shown European democracies his heels, the tired generalissimo could turn to more pressing internal problems. Among them:

Order. Though Spain needs manpower to rebuild, many moons will pass before unemployment will be solved. Still breathing in their second wind after 32 months of war, discharged Spanish soldiers will not readily bow to anything less than military law. Franco's answer is expected to be a 1,000,000-man army until early 1940.

Health. Substantiated reports from Madrid tell of a scurvy-like disease sweeping former Loyalist territory, caused by lack of fresh fruits, vegetables and milk. Its medicine chest emptied, short of bandages, iodine, salves and medicines, Spain has sent hurry-up orders to cope with the sorriest physical plight an enlightened nation has suffered in modern times.

Housing. Though intent on restoring shell-pocked Catholic churches in Madrid and other former frontier points, Franco faces a far greater carpentry job in placing roofs over several hundred thousand ex-Madrilenos who fled the capitol in war, returning in peace to find their metropolis a shambles.

JULIAN BESTEIRO

Revenge. Most Loyalist leaders like Gen. Jose Miaja fled Spain after hoisting the white flag of surrender. Two notable exceptions were Gen. Segismundo Casado, war minister of the defense council, and Julian Besteiro, a moderate Republican who took no active part in the war except to supervise feeding women and children during Madrid's two-year siege. Humanitarian or not, Senor Besteiro was arrested and court martialed along with General Casado.

Finance. Before the war Spain's gold reserve of $740,000,000 was exceeded only by the U. S., Britain and France. Also on hand were vast hoards of silver. By April, 1938, the U. S. federal reserve bulletin reported Spanish gold had dropped to $525,000,000, and by this month as General Franco entered Madrid, nobody apparently knew where any Spanish gold might be. One vague hint was that Marino Gamboa, a rich Loyalist-sympathizing Filipino, had moved most of it to Mexico and thereby insured the solvency of Loyalist refugees. Meanwhile Nationalist Spain held an empty bag.

People

Born, President Roosevelt's ninth grandchild, a boy, to Mr. and Mrs. John Boettiger (Anna Roosevelt Dall), at Seattle.

● Appointed, New Hampshire's liberal former Sen. Fred H. Brown, to the U. S. comptroller generalship.

● Douglas Fairbanks, ex-movie star, has been ordered to return $72,186 refunded by the U. S. on income tax payments in 1927-28-29.

Argentina

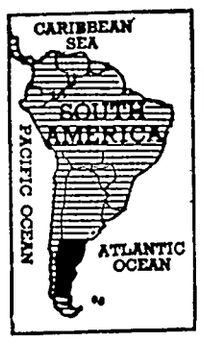
In southern Argentina lies little-known Patagonia, (black section on map) on whose 267,000 square miles live only 77,750 souls. Though neglected, it constitutes a good third of the nation's territory, a fertile land for expansion in days to come. But Germany also seeks to expand, and surprised Argentinians recently read in their newspaper Noticias Graficas the unsubstantiated report of an outrageous plan:



Germany's Argentine embassy is said to have advised the Berlin colonial office that "Patagonia is nobody's land and we can annex it . . . Argentina considers it hers on the basis of outdated political ideas." Another passage allegedly said the report was submitted with "the theoretical supposition that the whole territory should be annexed as a field for settlement and economic activity by Germans."

While the German embassy fumed and denied, all departments of the Argentine government were ordered to start investigations. What might otherwise be an unimportant issue may have great effect, for Argentina alone among South American nations has been loathe to break away from German trade alliances. If Patagonia is indeed threatened, Buenos Aires will be quick to seek shelter in Pan-American solidarity.

Labor

The unhappy plight of U. S. employer-employee relations may be due either to (1) the Wagner labor relations act, or (2) American Federation of Labor's battle with Congress of Industrial organizations. Like an impatient school teacher, both congress and the White House have resolved to end this squabble, the White House by sponsoring A. F. of L.-C. I. O. peace talks, congress by amending the Wagner act.

When April 11 was chosen starting date for senate committee hearings on Wagner amendments, labor peace talks were in full bloom. But so strong are the workingman's feelings about the proposed changes that many a peace advocate thought hearings might have been delayed until labor's warring factions either make up or draw swords.

To amend the Wagner act, congress can pick from four sets of proposals, all opposed by C. I. O., three of them submitted by coherent factions with special interests:

(1) By Massachusetts' Sen. David I. Walsh, obviously favored by A. F. of L., which opposes all other proposals: Curtail the national labor relations board's power to invalidate union contracts; require NLRB elections by craft rather than by industrial units; permit employer petitions for elections; permit appeals in representation cases.

(2) By Nebraska's Sen. Edward R. Burke, and supported by the potent, strike-weary National Association of Manufacturers: Require that NLRB have representative from labor, management and the public; outlaw deduction of union dues from pay envelopes; outlaw "coercion" by either employers or unions; establish code of "unfair labor practices" for unions as well as employers; forbid strikes unless a majority of employees approve; require all union officials to be U. S. citizens; permit transfer of "unfair labor practice" charges from NLRB to federal district court.

(3) By Oregon's Sen. Rufus Holman: To split NLRB's duties. Administrative and investigatory power would be vested in a labor relations commissioner. Final decisions would be made by a nine-member labor appeals board.

(4) By Kentucky's Sen. M. M. Logan, supported by the National Grange and other farm groups: To extend exemption of agricultural workers under the Wagner act to processors and packers of farm produce.

Miscellany

Figured, by New York's Rep. Bruce Barton, that the stock market usually gains when President Roosevelt goes fishing or vacationing, usually falls when he goes on a speaking tour.

'Father' of the Santa Fe Trail

IN 1821 Capt. William Becknell set out from Franklin, Mo., with four companions to trade with the Comanche Indians. Near the mountains they met a party of Mexicans who told them of Mexico's successful revolt against Spain and invited them to come to Santa Fe to trade. Although Becknell had only a small amount of merchandise, he disposed of it at a great profit. So when he returned to Missouri, he had no difficulty in getting Franklin citizens to invest more than $5,000 in another trading venture.

Accompanied by a party of 30 men, Becknell set out for Santa Fe the next spring. When the caravan reached the Caches on the Upper Arkansas, he made a momentous decision. Instead of continuing up the Arkansas into what is now Colorado, then going south by way of Taos, he decided to attempt a short cut. It would take him through an unexplored country but it would avoid the long and circuitous mountain route of his first trip.

Counting on finding springs or streams along the route, the party took only a two days' supply of water. At the end of that time they were in a desert country, suffering the tortures of thirst. In their extremity they first killed their dogs to drink their blood, then cut off their mules' ears for the same purpose.

Near the Cimarron river they discovered an old buffalo bull. They killed him and drank the water from his stomach. By this time Becknell had enough of the "short cut."

He led his party north until they struck the Arkansas and, following that stream, arrived at last at Taos. Despite their failure, the route which Becknell had tried later became a favorite one for many trading parties and he is remembered as the "father" of the Santa Fe trail.

The First Land Agent

AFTER the Revolution, New York, disregarding the right of the Iroquois Indians to the land south of Lake Ontario, ceded 6,000,000 acres to Massachusetts who promptly disposed of these lands to Oliver Phelps and Nathaniel Gorham, for a million dollars.

In 1786 Phelps left Massachusetts with a party to explore the vast territory which he had acquired. After a 130-mile trip through what was then a wilderness, he reached the shores of Canandaigua lake where he called the Iroquois to a council.

For two days the negotiations proceeded smoothly. Then the great Seneca orator, Red Jacket, arose. He recalled the sufferings of his people during the Revolution, and stirred his auditors up to such a fury that the little group of white men began to fear for their lives.

Fortunately for them, another chief named Farmer's Brother halted the council until their passions died down and the next day a satisfactory treaty was concluded. Then Phelps began surveying his land into tracts, called ranges, and subdividing these into townships, six miles square. Thus he became the pioneer in the system of land surveying used in this country.

In 1789 he achieved another distinction. He opened a land office in Canandaigua, said to have been the first in this country for the sale of forest lands to settlers, and thus helped settle western New York.

Adventure After Death

VICTOR TREVITT was a native of New Hampshire, who at the age of 14 ran away from home and became a printer in Chillicothe, Ohio. By the time he was 20 he had been in the army and had many close calls in the Mexican war.

He emigrated to Oregon City, Ore., in 1854, became territorial printer, newspaper man and clerk in the house of representatives. Next he took to exploring up the Columbia river, after which he returned to Dalles City and opened a tavern that catered to prospectors. As the town grew, he opened two more taverns. Soon he was one of its leading citizens and was sent to the state capital to serve as senator.

When he returned to Dalles City, he found that the free spending era was over and his taverns were no longer profitable. This led him to gambling at which he made a considerable fortune. He died on January 23, 1883, but this was only the start of another adventure.

He had made arrangements to be buried on Memaloose island, the burying ground for one of the neighboring Indian tribes. Burial in the same ground with a white man was considered "bad medicine" by the Indians. The day after Trevitt was buried there, all who had relatives in the Memaloose graveyard dug them up and buried them on the mainland. Today, amid the scattered bones of Indians who have no descendants to remove them, the body of Victor Trevitt, adventurer, still rests.

★ Deanna Stays Deanna
★ Bouquets for McCarey
★ Clothes Make the Guide

By Virginia Vale

DEANNA DURBIN seems to be the current heroine of moviedom, because of her excellent performance in "Three Smart Girls Grow Up." A lot of people who liked "Three Smart Girls" were pretty sure that they wouldn't like this sequel; sequels have a way of being disappointing, especially in the movies.

Then along came Universal with the announcement that in this one their money-making little star turned glamorous. That made everything much worse. If Deanna was going in for slinky gowns and false eyelashes even the critics who had always liked her were going to use barbed adjectives, and urge their readers to stay far, far away from theaters where those three particular smart girls grew up.

But along came the picture, and there has been dancing in the streets. The picture is swell, and Deanna isn't "glamorous," she's just herself. It's a picture that everybody ought to see.

Our hero this time is Leo McCarey, director-producer, who also did a turn as writer for "Love Affair." The picture is one of the best that has come out of Hollywood in a long, long time. When you see it, you might pause and think of how very bad it might have been, were it not so expertly done. With a couple of not very good actors in the roles played by Irene Dunne and Charles Boyer, with a run-of-the-mill director, it could easily have been a B picture.

Several bouquets should go to McCarey for his work on the writing end also. His movie career began with writing, you know. Hal Roach suggested that he become an actor, and he replied that he'd rather become a writer. Within six months he was a studio executive; then he directed Laurel and Hardy and Charlie Chase comedies for five years, and in 1936 he directed "Ruggles of Red Gap" for Paramount and was all set for big things.

"Love Affair" was developed out of an idea of his, with Miss Dunne and Boyer in mind for the picture. Don't miss it!

If you liked "The Citadel" you'll be glad to know that "Vigil in the Night," by the same author, has been bought as a starring vehicle for Carole Lombard. A romantic drama, it tells of the love and sacrifices of a young woman who wants to save her sister, a student nurse, from the results of a moment of carelessness which leads to the death of a hospital patient.

Jack Berch, one of NBC's handsome young baritones, recently discovered that clothes are more important than he thought. With summer just ahead, he bought a yachting outfit, and liked it so much that he wore it right out of the tailor's and back to Radio City.

He was on his way through the first-floor corridors to the elevators when an elderly lady stopped him. "Young man," said she, "I stopped to look at one of the murals here, and the touring group I was with has gone on. Please continue my tour."

Berch used to be a small-town boy, and learned to be polite to elderly ladies. So, cursing his yachting cap, he escorted her to the front door, industriously describing the murals they passed on the way. There she discovered her group, and he fled to the studios, his cap in his hand.

Paul Whiteman's replacing Burns and Allen on the air for the summer could be listed as "Turn about is fair play." They once replaced Paul Whiteman.

ODDS AND ENDS—If you liked "Lives of a Bengal Lancer" you'll look forward to "The Real Glory"—same star, Gary Cooper, same director, Henry Hathaway . . . Dorothy Lamour and Jon Hall, "Hurricane" stars, will appear together in "Canal Zone" . . . Pat O'Brien will have the lead in "Father Damien," the story of the priest who devoted his life to the lepers in the colony of Molokai.

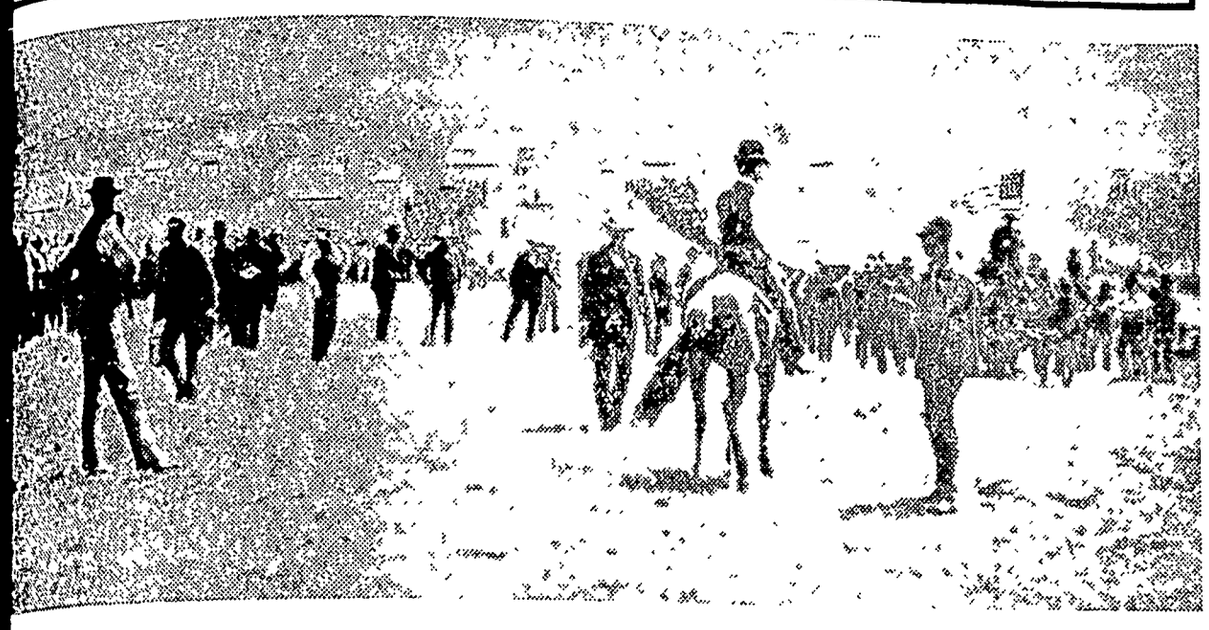
'The Most Eventful Horse-Race In History' Run in Oklahoma Just 50 Years Ago This Month



A part of the crowd of 50,000 that massed on "The Line" awaiting the signal to make the "Run."

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON
© Western Newspaper Union.

FIFTY years ago this month occurred "the most eventful horse-race in history."

On April 22, 1889, an army of more than 50,000 Americans from nearly every state in the Union had gathered along the borders of a long-forbidden territory. At noon came the signal which sent them on their mad rush into the Promised Land and when a new day dawned they were already busy transforming a wilderness into a land of cities and farms.

Never before had America witnessed such a scene and it is not likely that it will ever see it again. But out of the dust and confusion and turmoil of that day arose a new commonwealth and Oklahoma, "the land of the red people," added a new star to the American flag.

Back of this historic horse-race—or "the run," as they refer to it in the Oklahoma of today—is the age-old story of a land-hungry people. Soon after the Creek and Seminole Indians, assembled in a great Indian council at Fort Smith, Ark., in 1866, ceded their lands west of the ninety-eighth meridian to the United States government, the agitation for opening this country to white settlement started.

In a few years came the railroads and in their wake the "boomers." Between the two there was a close connection, at least in the initial stages of the movement.

In 1870 the M., K. & T., the first railway to enter the Indian Territory, began laying tracks southward from the Kansas border. Its construction was rushed across the Cherokee, Creek and Choctaw nations, and thence across Red River into Texas. The A. & P. (Frisco) built its line across the Shawnee and Wyandotte reservations, entered the Cherokee nation and affected a junction with the M., K. & T. at Vinita in 1872

The Boom Begins

In 1884 the Santa Fe line began building straight through the center of the territory from north to south. This line, completed in 1887, passed directly through the coveted "unassigned lands" and its coming was the last clarion call to homeseekers. The big boom—the irresistible cry for the new lands for white colonists—swelled into a national demand.

The outstanding figure among the "boomers" was Capt. David L. Payne, who had been a scout during the Indian wars on the southern plains in the sixties and seventies. As early as 1880 Payne led a colony to the North Canadian river and attempted a settlement near the present site of Oklahoma City. He was arrested and his colonists conducted back across the border. Within a month Payne was back with another colony, which met the same fate.

But he never relaxed his efforts. Colony after colony was organized under his leadership and pushed across the forbidden borders, only to be met by the bayonets of Uncle Sam's soldiers.

Payne was finally indicted by a federal grand jury, but his death at Wellington, Kan., in the midst of another forward movement, removed this industrious captain of the "boomers" from the scene. His work was taken up and carried on by William L. Couch. The last invasion was in the fall of 1885, when Couch was placed under arrest, and his people removed from the territory.

By this time the federal authorities at Washington were beginning to get busy. Bill after bill authorizing the opening was debated and defeated. At last after a bitter fight, participated in by Indians and Indian agents, cattle barons and special interest lobbyists, the Oklahoma bill passed the house in February, 1889, failed in the senate, finally was tacked on as a rider to the Indian appropriation bill and became a law March 3, 1889. President Harrison issued a proclamation setting the date of the opening on April 22, 1889.

Like wildfire the slogan "On to Oklahoma" again swept through the country and the prospective homeseekers, now clothed with legal powers, began everywhere to assemble for the grand rush. Two million acres in the unassigned lands were surveyed and staked into quarter sections and townsites.

Detachments of cavalry were deployed to patrol the borders of the new lands. Registration offices were opened at Guthrie and Kingfisher. Arrangements were made with the railroads to run as many trains as possible into the new territory on the day set for the opening.

The Great Day Dawns

A graphic account of what took place on that historic April 22 is given by Carl Coke Rister in his book, "Southern Plainsmen," published recently by the University of Oklahoma Press. He writes:

"The morning of the eventful day dawned bright and clear. For many miles along the northern boundary of the land to be opened thousands of homesteaders were camped, and hundreds of others were coming in hourly. Soldiers patrolled the southern side of the line to keep back any overly ambitious contestant, yet a majority of those who were present accepted such restrictions without complaint and a spirit of good cheer and friendly banter seemed to prevail. Still, as the morning wore away, the waiting people became restless, and long before the time came to start they were arranging themselves in line along the boundary.

"A signal officer, with a flag in one hand and a bugle in the other, took a position where all could see him. Promptly at twelve he sounded the note which sent thousands in a mad headlong dash towards the south; and other officers stationed at intervals along the boundary relayed the signal down the line. The din and confusion which followed is indescribable. Many horses hitched to vehicles became frightened with the sudden noise and clamor and broke away in runs, overturning vehicles and spilling their contents on the prairies; a choking cloud of dust enveloped the racers making it difficult for one to see another and thereby imperilling the lives of heedless contestants; the speeding trains disgorged their shouting and exulting passengers, who were sent sprawling on the ground or who struck the earth running; and horseback riders, leaning low over their laboring mounts, were strung out across the prairies or they raced side by side, and their loud oaths, laughter and shouts accentuated the thundering hubbub.

"Along the southern boundary of the land to be opened the confusion was almost as great. Thousands of contestants had congregated at Purcell and at other points on the southern bank of the Canadian river. This silt-filled river was an effective barrier which made the work of patrolling soldiers easy. Several days before the opening, desirable crossings were located, and before the start was made long lines of horseback riders followed by vehicles were opposite Purcell, on the north bank of the river.

A Tense Moment

"A short time before the starting signal was to be given Lieutenant Adair of the Fifth cavalry, mounted on a white horse, took his station on a hill where all could see him. The atmosphere seemed to be charged with excitement and tenseness as the watchers saw him lift a bugle to his lips; and it is reported that even before the notes of the instrument were heard along the south bank, reckless horsemen were plunging into the turgid waters of the stream, making for the opposite bank, and that vehicles, in some cases loaded with families and household effects, were following closely behind them. Some of the vehicles mired in the quicksands, but the drivers unhitched their teams, mounted their favorite horses and continued the race. Within an hour the prairies on the northern side of the river were covered with excited homeseekers, some pegging down stakes on their claims, some engaged in heated controversies over priority rights, and some speeding on to other sites."

No less an amazing spectacle than this epic "run" was the sight which followed immediately, of towns springing into existence on the prairie overnight. It is said that within two hours after the homeseekers had crossed the Canadian, a townsite company was laying out the municipality of Lexington, not more than a mile distant from Purcell. That night Guthrie was a tented city of 15,000 population and Oklahoma City had more than 10,000. All in all more than 100,000 people had entered Oklahoma on that historic April 22.

Not all of them stayed. Thousands became discouraged when they failed to establish claims or became involved in quarrels, fights and litigation over the land they wanted. For them the Promised Land proved to be only a mirage, so they drifted back to their old homes in other states. But many more thousands did stay and, enduring all the privations of life on the last frontier, they helped build the commonwealth of Oklahoma. Today as they join in celebrating the golden anniversary of their state, they look back upon their work and call it good.

A view of the town of Guthrie a few days after the "Run."

An interesting picture of the stirring scenes which preceded the "run" is given in the following newspaper dispatches:

INDIAN TERRITORY, April 19, 1889.—Within three days the peaceful prairies of Oklahoma will become the arena for the most picturesque race the world ever has seen.

Long cavalcades of canvas-covered wagons have been arriving at Fall Creek all day, where temporary headquarters of the inrushing hordes of settlers has been made. Tomorrow, permission will be granted by the government for settlers to cross the Cherokee Strip to the edge of Oklahoma, so that settlers from the north will have the same show as those now established at Purcell station.

The line as far east as Arkansas City is patrolled by soldiers, and special guards have been detailed to watch every bridge and ford. Guards on the Santa Fe lines will not permit any passenger to alight within the unopened territory.

An Unnamed Town

This town is unnamed. Its streets are formed by wagons. Its population numbers fully 18,000 people, roughly dressed, all armed and all alert for the bugle note on April 22, which opens the territory where no law prevails.

Very few women are in the train. Fakirs who spread their green tables on every vacant spot, and in every available shack, are reaping a harvest from their games with which settlers while away the time. Here one sells a prize package soap; there one has a patent medicine; another offers hurriedly written maps of Oklahoma, on which the most desirable places for settling are said to be shown.

GEN. WESLEY MERRITT

Saloons have their share of faro and stud poker. Only last night a young fellow turned back home, because he had nothing left with which to pay his registration fee for a claim.

The crowds are increasing every hour. Hotels, such as they are, were filled to capacity several days ago, and tonight men are asleep on the bare ground, near their wagons. Blankets are at a premium, for although the days are very warm, the nights are chilly, and many fights have resulted over lost covering.

Shacks which serve as saloons are a bedlam of snores, clinking glasses, and coarse conversation. One blue-eyed, middle-aged man just finished exhibiting his expression of humor on a sign which he took from his wagon, "Chinch bugged in Illinois; cycloned in Nebrasky; whitecapped in Indianny; bald knobbed in Missoury; prohibited in Kansas; OKLAHOMA OR BUST."

Merritt's Report

WASHINGTON, April 19, 1889.—Reports filed today by General Merritt in the Indian Territory state that every precaution is being taken by military authorities to prevent violence on the part of boomers in their alleged attempts to delay settlers on the day of the Oklahoma opening.

Bridges are being guarded, and soldiers are posted everywhere in the territory. Indians in the Cherokee strip were reported in an ugly frame of mind over the encroachments of settlers along the north boundary of the territory.

ARKANSAS CITY, KAN, April 21, 1889.—We newly arrived newspaper men have given the barbers a holiday, boycotted the bootblacks, scorned boiled shirts, and stiff hats, discarded suspenders, buckled on our belts and climbed into long-legged boots, which are as pliable as a straitjacket. Nevertheless, our tender feet plainly can be seen through our stirrups. Sun-dried boomers shout all sorts of ironical advice as we pass by on our unruly mounts, and cowboys persist in challenging us to a race. Falling back to let us go ahead, they leap forward and as they whirl by us, they lash the tails of our already fidgety mustangs, and we hang on by grasping the saddle horn with both hands, while our sombreros sail away. From the menagerie we had planned to stage, we have become the roaring circus of the camp . . . (From a dispatch by James Morgan to the Boston Globe.)

What to Eat and Why

C. Houston Goudiss Explains How Food Can Make You Fat or Thin; Offers Tips on Gaining Weight

By C. HOUSTON GOUDISS

TO NEARLY every adult, weight is a matter of great concern. Thin people step on the scales in the hope of finding that they have gained a pound or two. Fat people sometimes weigh themselves several times a day, trusting each time that the arrow will point to a slightly lower figure. In many cases, the reason for this absorbing interest is vanity—a desire to look better. But the real objective should be to attain the weight at which one feels better, for few people realize that to weigh neither too much nor too little is one of the best possible aids to buoyant health. Moreover, the secret of weight control for normal individuals lies in the kind and amount of food consumed.

The science of nutrition teaches us that all body fat originates as surplus fuel . . . that is, food which has been consumed over and above the immediate requirements of the body machine. It therefore follows that in general the problem of gaining or losing weight is concerned with an increase or reduction in the total fuel value of the diet.

Shortage or Surplus of Fuel

Those who find it difficult, after 30, to avoid taking on excess pounds must learn to reduce the total fuel intake. Otherwise, they may find themselves burdened with a mounting surplus of fat, which not only destroys beauty, but impairs health, and tends to decrease both mental and physical efficiency. On the other hand, those who feel that they must struggle to keep their weight up to normal . . . who declare that they simply cannot gain, no matter how much they eat, should acquaint themselves with the high-caloric foods and make a persistent effort each day to eat a little more than enough to meet their needs. If a gain is achieved, the result will be well worth the effort. For just as overweight is a handicap to health and efficiency, so have nutritionists observed that physical efficiency may be definitely decreased when the weight falls more than 10 per cent below the average for one's height.

It is often said that it is easier to lose weight than to gain it, and in many cases this is true. For the overweight person who consistently cuts down the fuel value of the diet, should, under normal circumstances, be able to reduce gradually, comfortably and effectively. But the individual who is underweight often has a small appetite and therefore has little desire to eat the increased quantities of food that are required in order to gain.

Influence of Body Build

Nutritionists have observed that many people who find it difficult to gain have a tall, slender type of body build. It has been determined that in people of this type, the digestive tract is usually shorter than in those having a stocky build. Moreover, they tend to be more tense, more active and of a more nervous temperament. As a result, the passage of food through the digestive tract may be so rapid that it leaves the body before all the available nutrients can be utilized. At the same time, these active people tend to burn up more of their food for energy, so it is not surprising that they fail to store body fat, unless the diet is especially planned to meet their needs.

Concentrated Foods Desirable

The well balanced diet, with its full quota of minerals and vitamins is basic to good health for all. But in order to produce a gain in weight, the diet of individuals belonging to the slender type should be composed of easily digested foods, which can be utilized by the body with a minimum of effort; and it should include generous amounts of concentrated and highly nourishing foods.

Included in this classification are eggs, cheese, cream, butter or margarine, bacon, bread, cereals, cream soups, custards, ice cream, rice and tapioca puddings. The addition of two or three glasses of milk to the regular meals will be found useful in increasing the fuel value of the diet. Milk also belongs in the reducing diet, but there it is used to replace other high caloric foods. Fruit juices will be found useful in stimulating the appetite of those who desire to gain; and the fuel value of these beverages may be increased by the addition of milk or cream.

An Extra Meal

Very often it is possible to get extra nourishment into the diet by way of a light lunch in mid-morning, mid-afternoon or both—provided it does not interfere with the appetite for the regular meals. This may take the form of fruit juice and crackers; malted milk; cocoa, egg nog or plain milk. A between-meal snack is regarded as especially desirable for thin people whose work is fatiguing. It will help them to sustain energy and prevent them from coming to their regular meals too tired to enjoy or profit by food.

Importance of Rest

Since thin people have a tendency to tire quickly, they are advised to get plenty of rest. There should be long hours of sleep at night, and nutritionists have also observed that the food is apt to be better utilized if a short rest is taken before meals.

Questions Answered

Mrs. G. M. P.—Liver contains four vitamins, A, B, C and G, though the vitamin C is mostly destroyed in cooking. It is also notable as a source of the blood-building mineral iron, and of copper, which is necessary for the proper utilization of iron. Muscle meats are considered a significant source of vitamin G, and contain some vitamin B. Pork has a considerably higher content of the B vitamin than lamb, mutton or beef.

NO 1 MEASURE

The No. 1 measure in the reorganization program of state government which created a Department of Public Safety, wsa signed by Governor Wilson a week ago and will become law upon publication this week. The new department will include the highway patrol from the Secretary of State's office, the bureau of investigation from the Attorney General's office and the inspection services from the office of the Fire Marshall, the Bureau of Labor and the Commerce Commission These services will be lifted intact from their former departments with some readjustments probable in supervisory personnel. About 264 employes are combined under a Safety Commissioner named by the Governor and savings in excess of $100,000 annually are expected to follow elimination of duplication of services which developed under the old system.

SAFETY COMMISSIONER

Choice of a Commissioner to head this department was no small headache to the Governor. The department is divided into five divisions: highway safety, criminal investigation, fire prevention, inspection, and statistics and records. This latter department includes statistics relating to fingerprint and criminal records. Highway patrolmen now possess police powers and the patrol will remain at its maximum strength of 128 men. At first glance an outstanding police officer would seem the ideal choice to head this department but to find a commissioner with such experience combined with the necessary exceutive ability has been no small job. Several likely candidates were eliminated when the legislature set the annual salary at $4,000; below the annual income of the sherriff of many Iowa counties.

BOOTLEG FAGS

July 4 the new cigarette law designed to forestall the cigarette bootlegger becomes effective. The two cent state tax stamp will not be used thereafter and possession of more than two packs of cigarettes without the evidence the Iowa tax has been paid is a violation of the new law. After July 4 the manufacturer or wholesaler of the fags will be required to stamp the tax upon each package. Instead of an adhesive stamp the packages will probably be run through a metering machine which will print the stamp. This is expected to stop the flow of unlicensed cigarettes from other states and put an end to reuse of cancelled stamps which are easily detached from the cellophane covering of the package. The State will require a few stamps for packages of cigarettes of sizes which vary from the popular twenties. The cigarette tax department has been transferred from the State Treasurer's office to the Tax Commission and officials estimate increased revenue up to $1,000,000 annually.

BUDGET CUT BACK

Even the inclination of the lower house to let appropriations run away from the limitations of former budgets failed to shake Governor Wilson loose from his campaign promise to bring about some genuine tax reduction. The so-called economy bloc in the house failed consistently to cut appropriations as considered in house sessions. As a result the bill carried several substantial increases when the house completed formal action. Following a series of meetings with house leaders Governor Wilson conferred with a house caucus and brought about an agreement which blankets cuts of ten per cent will be made on appropriations for the many executive departments. Efforts of the Governor and the economy bloc to force reductions is viewed by some observers as definitely ending any possibility of adjourning within the expected 100-day period.

TAG ENDS

LEGION HALL PROJECT GOING FORWARD REPORTS COMMITTEE

Although there has not been a great deal of publicity the past few weeks on the proposed Legion-Community Hall, never-the-less the project is advancing forward, according to a committee of Legionaires who are heading the program.

The drive for funds continues and plans are being considered to make the community building even larger than was at first contemplated.

One of the committee members remarked, when interviewed by the Times writer, "Tell them everything is going along fine and that we are working on it every day"

SNOW BLANKETED NORTH IOWA MONDAY DELAYING FARM FIELD WORK

A heavy, wet snow fell over this section of the state Monday morning. The snow which put a two inch covering over the ground, came at a time when farmers were wanting good weather in order to complete seeding.

A number of farmers in this vicinity have their seeding finished and others have part of their seeding work completed. Most of the of the month of April has been unfavorable for farm work.

Snow continued to fall Monday night and in many sections of the state main highways were blocked by night. In the vicinity of Klemme there was about six inches of snow by Tuesday morning. Fairly high winds in some sections of North Iowa piled the snow into four foot drifts Monday night.

"YANKEE KING" IS TITLE OF THREE-ACT COMEDY K.H.S. SENIORS WILL GIVE

Play Will Be Presented Two Nights, April 27-28, At Local Gymnasium

It's time again for the senior play, and the class of 1939 has prepared a performance, under the direction of Mrs. Ernest Lewis, that will be second to none in high class entertainment. The "Yankee King" is the name of this year's production, and it is as funny as it is unusual.

Pa Hinkle, the central character, is found at the beginning of the play, taking orders and abuse from Ma Hinkle Pa has just made an idiotic purchase of the statuette of three Chinese monkeys, and has caught cold in the bargain He is told to stay on the sofa and nurse his cold while the rest of the family go to the movies

But Pa is not to have a quiet evening. He is soon awakened by four impressive gentlemen, who relate the surprising news that he is a descendant of a former king of Laurania and that he has been traced through his purchases of the monkeys The messengers beg him to return to the country and be king.

Pa really wants to be king because "what the king says, goes" and this will be a new experience for him. Ma is tricked into going when Pa refuses to go; and, of course, she must overrule him in any decision he makes

Their adventures in Laurania are fast and furious, with hilarious and side-splitting complications. After a few efforts by Ma to be boss, Pa is told by the Prime Minister that kings are beheaded in Laurania if they allow the queens to have any say-so. Pa finally takes hold with a vengeance and becomes king in a big way. His appointments are amazing, his policies revolutionary.

Finally, there is an uprising with American pistols doing full duty, and Pa's bullet-proof vest, under which he wears a mustard plaster, serving as a protection. However, Pa "gets his" and at the end of the third act, lies writhing and groaning on the sofa

The epilogue finds him safe in Clinton, waking from a troubled sleep. But as king of Laurania he has learned a thing or two, and he takes his turn at running the house

The "Yankee King" is as funny as they come, with plenty of action and plot The dream is as real to the audience as it is to Pa, and the outcome as satisfying. Be sure to see it next Thursday and Friday, April 27 and 28.

WHAT WE STRIVE FOR IN SCHOOL

What do we strive for in school? An education, of course It depends a lot on the individual himself how he uses his education One who never studies can hardly expect to learn a whole lot, yet there are some who learn without an education and are just as well off. Some can study and study, and never get anywhere Others can look over the work hastily, and know everything in it, but most have to study to learn

While in school, we hate to study but when examinations come we are sorry Many of us put off until tomorrow what we don't have to do today.

What we learn in school helps us throughout our lives It takes up the earlier part of our lives and what we learn then becomes a habit with us, so it is just as well to start with good habits, rather than trying to break bad ones later

The teachers try to help us learn, and it up to us to make use of the knowledge —Doris

This is a part of their study of thrift and budgets

Ma Hinkle wants to be boss, but doesn't want to be bossed. See her in "The Yankee King."

BLOW 'EM UP AND BUST 'EM
by
BARSWICK

Mildred Patterson has quite a time remembering who her relatives are. Are you related to her, Cecil?

The Home Ec I class is wondering why Phyllis S. always sits by the north window. Maybe the light is much better. Maybe????

This week we will complete our alphabet:

N is for Neuberger, a tall, lanky clown. Every night, he's sure to be in town.

O is for over, over the top. Once we Seniors get going, we can't be stopped.

P is for Patterson with a wobbly gait. She reaches the door and usually waits.

Q is for Quacks. They all come to school. We call them Juniors, that is the rule.

R is for Ruben, a dark, handsome flash. But, around girls, he's a bunch of trash.

S is for Stilles. There are four of them you know. At least "one" puts on a good show.

T is for teachers. They spoil the day. Only one thing lacking—we have to do what they say.

GRADES 1 & 2

We put some new spring pictures on our bulletin board this week.

Some of the third grade boys played a story for us on Wednesday. It was about the "Tar Baby."

Merlin, Willis, Dorance and Richard T. have new work books.

There are lots of little pink flowers on the plant Isabelle brought to school.

IN MEMORY OF NOEL ANDERSON

It's often hard to understand
Just why God reaches out His hand
And picks the fairest blossoms
From this garden bed of life.
Why, for a few short years
We've had them here
And then they've had to go.

But if we could glimpse into Heaven
I'm sure that there would be
Some spots our Maker thinks
Need brightening for you and me.
And so He takes our dear ones
To live with him there
Until some day we'll join them
In His everlasting car.

—Estelle Hansen.

POTASH AND PHOSPHATE ARE NEEDED NOW ON SOME SOILS

Although Iowa soils are generally not lacking in most plant nutrients, the phosphate and occasionally the potash content may be low enough to pay farmers to use fertilizers to replace these minerals.

The need for phosphates can be determined by chemical tests, and these tests are being used widely.

These new chemical tests should be made and interpreted only by men who have a real knowledge of the soil types concerned, says W. H. Pierre, head of the Agronomy Department at Iowa State College.

Men at the College have been conducting field experiments with lime, manure and phosphate fertilizer on all the important soil types of the state for nearly 20 years, Pierre says, and a wealth of information on the responses given by fertilizers on different soils has been accumulated.

Using this knowledge and knowing the crop history of the field, fertilizer requirements can be predicted by using the chemical tests with a greater measure of accuracy than would otherwise be possible.

The Soils Department tests samples free of charge to farmers throughout the state.
